THE CORRECT WORD

COMPLETE ALPHABETIC LIST

A.

A and An.

The following are the rules for the use of a and an before a vowel, a consonant, and the aspirate h: a is used before a consonant sound; an, before a vowel sound; as, “a boy;” “an eye;” when a vowel has a consonant sound, as in the word eulogy, a, and not an, is required. (Note that eu is equivalent to yioo.)

In the case of words beginning with h, an is always required when h is silent; as, “an heir;” when h is aspirated, a is required, unless the accent is on the second syllable, when an is used; as, “a history;” “an historian.” Some speakers prefer to use a even when the accent is on the second syllable; in consequence, both a and an are recorded as used before h; that is, when the accent is on the second syllable.

Able.

See Ible (suffix).

A. B. or B. A.; A. M. or M. A.

A. B. and B. A. are interchangeably used of the title Bachelor of Arts; A. M. and M. A., of the title Master of Arts.

A. M. and P. M.; a. m. and p. m.

A. M., the abbreviation of ante meridian, and P. M., of post meridian, are written with either capital or small letters, although capitals are preferred by many.

Above.

The use of above as an adjective in such constructions as, "the above address," is censured by some authorities; but it conforms to the business employment of the language. Careful speakers prefer such constructions as, "The address given above;" or "The above mentioned address," for the reason that above can then be properly construed as an adverb.

Above Any.

The use of above any for more than any is incorrect. Instead of saying, "I prize this book above any other that I have," say, "I prize this book more than any other that I have."

Absolutely.

Absolutely is superfluous in such constructions as, "It is absolutely correct." This word, when used occasionally, adds emphasis to a statement, but its too frequent use should be avoided.

Accede and Concede.

Accede is specifically used in the sense of to yield; as, "to accede to one's request;" Concede is used in the sense of to admit as true, to grant privileges; thus: in nice usage, we accede to one's terms, or one's requests, and concede to the truth of a statement; to a franchise.

Accept and Accept Of.

Of is always superfluous; thus: "We accept his hospitality" (not of his hospitality).

Accord.

As an intransitive verb, accord means to agree or suit; as, "My views accord with yours." As a transitive verb, accord in one of its uses means to bestow; and, as it carries with it a sense of much condescension, it should not be used merely in the sense of to grant or to give. A nice discrimination in the selection of these words, restricts accord, in its transitive sense, to mean to bestow a great favor or to recognize a high degree of merit; grant, to confer a favor, or a privilege; and give, to put into another's possession, something for which there is or is not a compensation; thus: "They accorded him high praise" (honor, etc.); "They granted him many favors" (or privileges); "They gave him the money" (or the privilege). (As privilege is also used in the sense of a special advantage, as well as that of a favor, it is often correctly used with the word give as well as with grant.)

Acknowledgment.

The spelling acknowledgment is preferable to acknowledgement.

Adapted To, For, From.

Adapted to is correct when the reference is to the conformity of the person or thing to the situation in question; as, "He adapts himself to the circumstances;" "The mind adapts itself to a difficult problem as the eye adapts itself to darkness."

Adapted for is correct when the reference is to the suitability of the person or thing in question to something; as, "He is not adapted for that kind of work."

Adapted from is correct when the reference is to the changing of the form or character to accord with something; as, "The play is adapted from the French."

Admit and Admit Of.

Both admit and admit of are correct, but they have variant meanings. Without of, admit means to afford an entrance; with of, to afford a discussion; thus: "The tickets will admit you to the theatre;" "The question does not admit of argument."

Adverb or Adjective After Verbs of Inaction.

Both a few and few are correct, but they have variant meanings; thus: a few means a small number; few, barely any.

Affect and Effect.

Affect means to influence; effect, to accomplish; as, "He was not affected by the news;" "He has effected a great change in the business management of the company."

Afraid.

The adjective afraid should not be used for the verb fear; thus: we say, "I am afraid of fire," but "I fear I cannot go," not "I am afraid I cannot go."

After Having.

After is superfluous in the sentence, "After having seen him, I returned home."

After, Afterward and Afterwards.

After, afterward, and afterwards, meaning later in time, are interchangeable in meaning. We say with equal propriety: "He came three hours after, or afterward or afterwards."

Aggravating.

Aggravating should not be used for irritating, as in the sentence, "His manners are very irritating." Aggravating means to make more grave or heavy; to intensify; as, "His sickness was aggravated by the mental suffering under which he labored."

Ago and Since.

Since is preferable to ago when referring to events that are recent; ago is preferable to since when referring to events that are not recent; as, "a few days since," but "a year ago."

Agreeably With.

The adverb agreeably, and not the adjective agreeable, is required in such constructions as, "Agreeably with your request, we send," etc., because it is the verb that is modified.

Note, too, that the preposition with seems more closely to express the meaning than does to, agreeably with meaning conformably with.

Ain't.

Ain't should never be used for isn't. Even as a contraction of am not it is censured by many critics, the form I'm not being universally preferred. "Am I not?" is required in interrogative sentences.

See Contractions.

All and Any.

All is required after a superlative; any followed by other, is required after a comparative; thus: we say, "This is the finest of all;" "This is finer than any other." All is required in order that the thing compared may be included in its class; any followed by other is required in the comparative form in order that the thing compared may be excluded from its class. Such constructions, however, as, "This is finer than any that I have ever seen," may be sanctioned on the ground that the clause "that I have ever seen" sufficiently excludes the thing under consideration from the class to which it belongs, the meaning being that which I now see is finer than any that I have previously seen. Rule.—When a comparative is followed by than, the thing compared must always be excluded from the class of things with which it is compared, by the use of other or some such word or words.

Further correct examples are: "There is no other place like New York" (not no place). "There is no other place so beautiful as this" (not no place).

In some comparisons, else is required instead of other; thus: "No one else is so kind as he;" "Nothing else is so desirable as this." "Nothing else ages like laziness."

When but is used, else must be omitted; thus: "It is no one but him;" "It is no one else than he."

All Of.

Of is not required in such constructions as "all of our friends," "all our friends" fully expressing the meaning.

All Ready and Already.

All ready means quite prepared; as, "I am all ready to go." Already means by this or that time; previously to, or at some specified time, or the time present, thus early; even then, or even now; as, "He has already performed the task."

All Right and Alright.

All right is correctly written only as two words.

All-Round Man or An All-Around Man.

"An all-round man" is the correct form.

All These and All of Them.

The best literary usage rejects of, preferring all these. In the expression "all of them," of cannot be omitted unless the construction is rearranged, as, "I have them all," instead of "I have all of them." Of in this sense means from, out of; and, as such expressions as "all of them," "both of them," do not make sense, they have been censured by many critics. On the other hand, they are recorded as idiomatic, and for this reason they will have the sanction of those who have a preference for idiomatic forms.

Allow and Permit.

Allow means merely the absence of an attempt to hinder; permit denotes a formal or implied assent; to grant leave to by express consent or authorization; as, "I do not allow my children to eat candy;" "I shall not permit you to go."

Allude.

Allude is incorrectly used in the sense of speak of, or mention. Allude means to refer delicately, indirectly, or incidentally, sometimes, as if in play; thus: we say, "He alluded to his visit, and implied that he would be pleased to call again." Such expressions as, "He alluded at great length to the injuries that he had received," are incorrect.

Almost.

Careless speakers sometimes err in saying most for almost, as, for example, "I have read most all the books in the library," for "almost all."

Alternative.

Other is superfluous in such constructions as, "There is no other alternative." Again, alternative is used only of two things; in consequence, such expressions as, "There are three alternatives," are incorrect.

Although, Though and While.

Although and though, meaning in spite of the fact that, are interchangeably used; as, "I shall go although (or though) I am hardly able to do so."

Amid and Amidst.

Amidst is preferred to amid, except in poetry, when the latter is frequently employed.

Among and Amongst.

Amongst is a late form of among, but is less used. As a rule, the words are interchangeable; but when used strictly of place, amongst often implies dispersion or motion; as, "He is among the crowd;" "They were walking amongst the trees."

Among and Between.

Among is distributive, and may apply to any number more than two; between is used of only two persons or things; as, "They discussed this among themselves;" "This is between us two."

Among One Another.

"Among one another" is censured by critics, "with one another," or "among themselves" being suggested as preferable.

Among and In.

The words among and in are interchangeable when used in the sense of in the midst or in association with; as, "He is among the crowd, or

“He is in the crowd.” When mere inclusion is to be expressed, in is required; as, “He is somewhere in the crowd.”

And Before Also, Therefore, and Consequently.

And is required before also, so, hence consequently, in such constructions, as, “You may bring the ink and also the letter;” “I was ill and so could not come;” “I have finished the study of English, and, therefore, I shall begin the study of French;” “I have been ill, and, consequently, have been unable to write to you.”

When the connection in thought is sufficiently remote as to require the semicolon, and is omitted. In literary usage, and so or so preceded by a semicolon is somewhat weak, and should be sparingly or never used.

And Which.

And which is incorrect in the sentence, “The latest book on this subject, and which is by far the most interesting,” etc., for the reason that a subordinate clause is connected with a principal clause by a co-ordinate conjunction. And which is correct in the sentence, “The latest book on this subject, which is by far the most interesting, and which,” etc. This is correct, for the reason that the co-ordinate conjunction and connects clauses of equal importance. Rule.—Co-ordinate conjunctions must connect like clauses.

Angry At and Angry With.

“Angry at” is used when expressing anger for an animal or an inanimate object; “Angry with,” for a human being; as, “He is angry at his dog;” “He is angry with his brother.”

Annual and Yearly.

Annual and yearly are interchangeable in meaning; as, "His annual (or yearly) income is two thousand dollars;" "This is a yearly (or annual) plant."

Answer and Reply.

An answer is a response or rejoinder,—spoken or written to a question (expressed or implied), request, appeal, prayer, call, petition, demand, challenge, objection, argument, address, letter, or to anything said or written. A reply is a response, written or spoken, in return for something that seems to call for it, as to give the information sought in a question, or to defend oneself or some one else against an attack. The following slight distinction is made between the uses of these words: An answer is a response to a question or a charge, a reply is a response to an assertion; the latter implies more thought and intelligence than the former.

Antecedent of the Relative Pronoun.

See Concord of Verb with Antecedent of Relative Pronoun.

Anticipate and Expect.

Anticipate is preferable to expect, when an event is looked forward to with pleasure; expect implies merely belief that something will occur.

Anybody Else's.

The phrases anybody else, somebody else, nobody else, etc., have a unitary meaning, as if one word, and properly take a possessive case (with the suffix at the end of the phrase): as,

“This is somebody else’s hat;” “Nobody else’s children act so.”—Century Dictionary.

Any One . . . Is.

Any one, anybody, each, any one, everybody, either, neither, one, some one, somebody, should be followed by singular pronouns, or verbs.

Any one, anybody, each, every one, everybody, either, neither, nobody, some one, somebody, may be followed by he or his. One should be followed, by one or one’s.

“Any one of these patterns is suitable.” “Every one of the ladies is here.” “Each one of the soldiers has a new uniform.” If any one wishes to make a suggestion, I wish he (or she, or he or she) would make it.” “Anybody in his senses would have done it.” “One dislikes to be told of one’s errors.”

(Note that any one, every one, and some one, are written as two words.)

Any Place.

Place is a noun, and so should not be used as an indirect object without a preposition. Place should be used with a preposition; as, “I saw it in some place,” or “I can’t find it in any place.” One should say, “I am going to some place,” or “I am going somewhere;” “I can’t find it in any place,” or “I can’t find it anywhere.”

Anyways and Anywise.

Anyways is an incorrect form of the colloquial expression anyway.

Anyway is properly written as two words when meaning in any way or in any manner. Its use in the sense of in any event, is colloquial, but when so employed it should be written as one word; thus: “Anyway (or anyhow) I am going.”

This use is, of course, avoided in dignified conversation or in written diction.

Anywise, meaning in any wise, is formed like such words as nowise, likewise. When written as one word, it is not preceded by the preposition in; otherwise it is; as, "If you can anywise effect this sale, do so," or "If you can in any wise effect this sale, do so." (While anyway, meaning in any way, is recorded as being properly written only as two words, anywise is not so recorded.)

Apostrophe.

The apostrophe is used to indicate the omission of letters or figures.

"He doesn't" (instead of does not). I'm (instead of I am). It's (instead of it is), or 6's and 7's (instead of sixes and sevens).

King's, queen's, instead of the old form kingis, queenis, to denote possession.

There is a general tendency to omit the apostrophe in the titles employed by business firms and corporations; thus: "The Studebaker Bros. Manufacturing Company," instead of "The Studebaker Bros.' Manufacturing Company."

'10 (instead of 1910).

Dot your i's.

Note.—For exposition of the use of the apostrophe with the letter s to indicate possession, see POSSESSIVES.

Appearance Sake, Appearance's Sake, Appearance' Sake.

It is permissible to omit both the apostrophe and the letter s in words that modify the noun sake; as, "for appearance sake;" "for fashion sake;" "for heaven sake;" "for conscience sake."

Appertain and Pertain.

Appertain and pertain are interchangeably used, and are equally correct.

Appreciate.

Note.—Appreciate, opposed to depreciate, means to increase in value; hence, such expressions as, “The property appreciates from year to year,” although censured by some critics, are correct.

Appreciate Highly.

Highly is superfluous in such constructions as, “We appreciate your services highly,” for the reason that appreciate means to place a sufficiently high estimate on.

Apprehend and Comprehend.

Apprehend means to perceive; as, “I apprehend danger.” Comprehend means to understand; as, “I comprehend your meaning.”

Approached.

Approached should not be used in the sense of petitioned or addressed; as, “He approached the members of the church for a longer vacation,” etc., instead of “He petitioned,” etc. It is correctly used when the meaning is “to come near” by indirect or covert intimation, suggestion, or question; thus: we say, “I approached him on this subject (felt my way), but as he did not encourage the suggestion, I said nothing further about it.”

Apt.

Apt implies natural fitness or tendency; as, “John is an apt pupil.” Likely refers to a contingent event regarded as very probable; as, “It is likely to rain to-day.” Liabile is used of a possible event regarded as disastrous; as,

 “He is liable to die at any moment.”

Around and Round.

Around and round are interchangeably used.

Arrive Safe.

The adjective safe is required, for the reason that reference is made to the condition of the subject, and not to the action of the verb. There is a growing tendency, however, to construe the verb as being modified and to use the adverb safely.

Arrive At.

Arrived at is correct, for the reason that the city is regarded, for the time being, as a mere point.

ARTICLE (THE, A, AN), REPETITION OF.*

The following are the rules that govern the repetition of the article:

Rule 1. When two or more nouns following each other denote the same person or thing, the article is not repeated; but when the nouns denote different persons or things, the article must be repeated before each noun, and a plural verb must be used.

NOUNS THAT DENOTE THE SAME PERSON.

The editor and publisher of the magazine is a very able man.

NOUNS THAT DENOTE DIFFERENT PERSONS.

The editor and the publisher of the magazine are very able men.

Rule 2. When two or more nouns following each other do not denote the same thing, but are so closely associated in thought that they may be considered as forming a whole, the article is placed before the first noun only, and a singular verb should be used.

The pen and ink is here.

He has a new horse and buggy.

If, however, for the sake of emphasis, the article is repeated before each noun, then a plural verb must be used. Thus, "The pen and the ink are both here;" "the bread and the butter are both on the table," etc.

Rule 3. When two or more nouns are compared, the article is not repeated if the nouns denote the same person or thing; but if the nouns denote different persons or things, the article must be repeated before each noun.

He is a better writer than the former editor. (Nouns do not denote the same person.) He is a better writer than speaker. (Nouns denote the same person.)

The repetition of the article is sometimes sanctioned for the sake of emphasis; as: "He went his way a sadder and a wiser man."

Rule 4. When a singular noun is modified by several adjectives, only one article must be used if the noun denotes but one object; but if the noun denotes more than one object, the article must be repeated before each noun.

ONE OBJECT.

A black and white dress.

A red, white, and blue flag.

The yellow and white cottage is the one I mean.

TWO OR MORE OBJECTS.

A black and a white dress.

A red, a white, and a blue flag.

The black and the white cottage are both for rent.

Rule 5. When a plural noun is modified by two or more adjectives, only one article must be used, and that is placed before the first adjective only.

6. The first and second chapters of the book are very interesting.

Note.—If the noun is singular, then Rule 4 is applicable. Thus, “The first and the second chapter are very interesting.”

Article The, Special Uses of.

The article the is placed before reverend and honorable when reference is made to persons bearing these titles; thus: “The Reverend;” “The Honorable.”

As.

As should not be used for that in such constructions as, “I do not know that I do.”

As and Like.

As is used to compare action or existence; like, to compare things.

As is followed by a noun or a pronoun (expressed or understood) and a verb (expressed or understood); as, “He is such a man as his father (was).”

Like is followed by a noun or a pronoun with a preposition understood; as, “He is like (unto) me.”

Thus: one properly says, “He acts (sings, speaks, etc.) as you do” or “He acts (sings, speaks) like you,” but not “He acts (sings, speaks, etc.) like you do.”

As Far As; As Soon As; As Long As.*

As far as, as soon as, as long as are usually interchangeable with so far as, as soon as, so long as; but if the extent or degree usually implied in these phrases is to be emphasized, however slightly, so is used preferably to as. Thus:

“We said of conduct that it is the simplest thing in the world as far as knowledge is concerned, but the hardest thing in the world so far as doing it is concerned.”

“Therefore, we fulfill the law of our being so far as our being is æsthetic and intellective, as well as so far as it is moral.”

In the first sentence as far as is equivalent in meaning to the phrase “with respect to” or “in relation to;” in the second sentence, there is a distinct reference to and limitation of extent conveyed in the phrase so far as. In brief, when in place of the phrase as far as the phrases with respect to or in relation to can be substituted, as far as is correctly used; but when the extent or degree is to be emphasized, so far as is correctly used.

“In so far as” is often used in the sense of so far as, but in is superfluous in this connection. Thus, in the sentence, “In so far as I am concerned you need not hesitate to refuse to go,” in is redundant.

I shall stay as long as I can.

So long as a person minds his own affairs, he will have no trouble with his neighbors.

In sentences like the foregoing, introduced by so far as, so long as, so soon as, as is often used instead of so, even by good speakers; but, as has been indicated, so is preferable when the extent or degree implied is to be emphasized.

* CORRECT ENGLISH: A COMPLETE GRAMMAR.

As Follows.

As follows may precede a plural enumeration, although some writers prefer to use as follow where there is more than one particular cited, as: "The explanation is as follows;" "The parts of speech are as follow."

As Followed by As.

As is followed by as in the comparison of equals; so in the comparison of unequals; as, "He is as tall as I;" "He is not so tall as I."

COMPARISON OF EQUALS (AS FOLLOWS AS).

"You may depend upon it, there are as good hearts to serve men in palaces as in cottages."

Had I read as much as others I might have been as ignorant.—Hobbs.

COMPARISON OF UNEQUALS (SO FOLLOWS NOT).

"Success in life is a matter not so much of talent or opportunity as of concentration and perseverance."

There is nothing so strong or safe in any emergency of life as simple truth.—Dickens.

As If and As Though.

See If and Though.

As If It Was.

Were, and not was, is required after as if, for the reason that the supposition is not known; thus: "It looks as if it were all right," not "it looks as if it was all right."

As It May.

In the sentence, "Be that as it may," may, and not will, is the required form, may expressing possibility, will, actual futurity.

As to Whether.

This construction is correct in such sentences as, "They were discussing the point as to whether his doings were justifiable or not."

At.

The presence of at improves such constructions as "He is at home," instead of "He is home."

At and To.

At and to are superfluous in such sentences as, "Where is he?" and "Where has he gone?" hence, their use should be avoided.

At All.

At all is superfluous in such sentences as, "There is no use in your going;" "I do not know him."

At Best.

"At best" is an incorrect form for "at the best."

At and In.

At is always required when the place is thought of as a mere point, whether a large or a small town; after the verb live, at must be used of small towns because the place is regarded for the time being, as a mere point. In is used of large towns after the same verb; as "He lives at Yonkers," "He lives in New York." At is used of large towns as well as of small in such construction as the following: "He lives abroad for the reason that all his business interests centre at London." In other words, the context shows that London, for the time being, is thought of merely as a geographical point or center.

At Length.

At length is correctly used when continuance is expressed; at last, when finality is attained; thus, we say, "At length he began to recover;" "At last he died."

Attenuate and Extenuate.

Attenuate means to lessen; to diminish or reduce in force, effect or value; extenuate means to make less blamable in estimation.

(Literal sense) "This uninterrupted motion must attenuate and wear away the hardest rocks." (Figurative sense) "We may reject and reject until we attenuate history into sapless meagreness."

"I have not desire to extenuate guilt nor to break down the distinction between virtue and vice."

At Rest or To Rest.

A body is laid at rest, not to rest, at expressing in this sense the notion of state or condition.

Authoress.

The terms "authoress," "doctress," "editress," "poetess," "lecturess," are no longer used, author, doctor, etc., being correct for both sexes.

Actress, not actor, however, is the required form for the feminine gender.

Avocation.

Avocation should not be used for vocation. Vocation is one's employment; avocation, one's diversion from that employment.

Awful.

Awful means inspiring with awe; causing fear or horror; filling with dread or reverence; terrible, appalling; as: "the awful mysteries of the world unseen;" "an awful disaster;" "the awful approach of death," "an awful shock."

Incorrect uses of this word are found in colloquial speech; as, "an awful warm day;" "an awful dinner."

Aye and Ay.

Aye and ay, pronounced a as in ate, are to be distinguished from aye, pronounced i as in ice, and meaning yes.

B.Backward and Backwards.

These terms are used interchangeably when expressing direction towards the back or the rear, the matter of selection being merely a question of euphony. Standard suggests the following: "The two forms may be conveniently used, in accordance with their origin etymologically, to distinguish the adjective and the adverb; as, 'a backward pupil;' 'He walked backwards;' also, to distinguish movement back from, but with the face toward a person, from mere direction of movement rearward. These ideas are usually expressed confusedly, except as back is used instead of backward or backwards to express the latter."

Bad and Badly.

Badly in such construction as, "I feel badly," "You look badly," is incorrect, the adjective, and not the adverb, being required after the verbs of the senses,—feel, look, taste, smell, sound, etc. when no action is expressed; as: "I feel bad," "You look bad," etc.

The use of bad in the same sense of ill is, strictly speaking, not correct; but it is in accordance with the conversational employment of the language. The addition of ly does not improve the construction, for the employment of the adverb badly after an inactive verb like feel or look is ungrammatical, it being at variance with the rule,—The adjective is required after a verb of inaction when the reference is to the condition or state of the subject. Compare with "I feel glad:" "You look sad."

Badly and Very Much.

Badly in the sense of very much, or greatly, is a loose employment of the word; and, while it is frequently used in colloquial speech, it is not in accordance with the best usage of the language. Instead of saying, "I need it badly," say, "I need it very much."

Bad Grammar.

Grammar presupposes an observance of its rules; hence, bad grammar is an incorrect expression. Grammatical or ungrammatical error, however, is correct. Instead of saying, "He uses bad grammar," say, "He uses incorrect English." Some authorities endorse the use of the expression "bad grammar," or "good grammar," but, as indicated, in strict usage, the expressions should be regarded as incorrect.

Balance.

The use of balance in the sense of remainder or rest is incorrect in such constructions as, "The balance of the evening was spent in dancing." Balance is an accountant's term, and properly is used of that which must be added to the less or subtracted from the greater of two amounts, as receipts or expenses, in order to make them equal; and as it does not properly denote what is left after a part has been taken away, as indicated, it should not be used in the sense of remainder or rest.

Bathos and Pathos.

Bathos means a ridiculous descent from the sublime to the commonplace. Pathos means feeling,—the power that awakens or moves feeling.

Be (Verb).

See To be.

Be Back.

Back denotes direction towards the starting point; but be back has no such significance. Instead of saying "I'll be back in a minute," say "I'll come back in a minute."

Been To.

Been to is colloquial; been in or been at being regarded as correct, according as the case may require; thus: "I have been in the city;" "I have been at church." It is difficult to avoid the use of been to, for the reason that been at or in does not seem wholly to convey the meaning.

Beg.

The use of beg in such constructions as, "I beg to state," is censured by critics as being (a) an overworked term, and (b) as hardly expressing the truth.

Beg Pardon.

Beg pardon is nicely used when one makes a breach of etiquette; excuse me, when one wishes to leave the table or the room.

Began and Begun.

See Have, Has and Had.

Behave.

The adverb properly is not necessary in such constructions as, behave yourself, behave being used absolutely to mean to conduct one's self properly. The interrogative form, "Will you behave?" is censured by some critics, but behave may be used absolutely in the interrogative as well as in the declarative form.

Being.

The use of being in such constructions as "is being built," has been censured by some critics, but its employment, as shown by English scholars, is strictly correct.

Beside.

Beside means at one's side; as, "He sat beside her;" besides means in addition to; hence, besides is the required form in such sentences as, "There was no one at home besides me."

Between.

Between is a preposition, and so must be followed by the objective case. Instead of saying, "This is between you and I," say, "This is between you and me." See For.

Bound.

The use of bound for determined or destined in such sentences as, "He was bound to go," "He was bound to fail," is censured; "He was determined to go," "He was destined to fail," being the correct forms. The use of bound in the sense of morally or legally constrained or compelled, is correct; as, "He is bound to pay the debt."

Both.

Both, as an adjective or a pronoun, is properly used of only two persons or things; as a conjunction, it may be used of more than two; as: (pronoun) "Both are here" (two persons); (adjective) "I like both children" (two persons); (conjunction) "Both the parents, the teachers and the pupils are going" (more than two). See Either.

Brethren and Brothers.

Brethren indicates the relationship between the members of a religious organization or fraternity. Brothers is used of those who are related by birth, and also of the members of a fraternity.

Bright and Brightly.

See Sun shines bright.

Bring and Fetch.

See Fetch

But Him.

Used as a preposition, in the sense of except, but must always be followed by the objective case; as, "There was no one at home but him and me (not he and I)."

But That and But What.

But that means except the thing referred to; but what means except that which; as, "I do not know but that I shall go." "I have nothing but what (but that which) you gave me."

See Doubt that and Doubt but that.

By and Of.

By and of are used somewhat interchangeably in such sentences as, "I know a man by the name of Brown," "I know a man of the name of Brown." Some critics indicate, however, that one might know a man of the name of Brown, but know him by the name of Smith.

By and With.

By is used before the agent or doer; with, before the instrument or means; as "The boy was accidentally hit by his playmate with a ball." Again, in the absence of a direct agent, the instrument or means is properly regarded, for the time being, as the agent or doer; as, "The barn was struck by lightning;" "The house was heated by steam;" "The cooking was done by gas," (by means of).

C.Call On.

"Call on" in the sense of to make a brief visit is preferable to "call upon," upon being more especially used to express motion from above or from the side.

Came Near.

Came near for almost in such sentences as, "We came near falling down stairs," is not in accordance with the best usage of the language.

Can and May.

Can denotes ability; may, permission; in consequence, the expression, "Can I go?" for "May I go?" is incorrect. While may is required to ask permission, can must be used to deny the request; thus: "May I go?" "You cannot go."

Can but and Can not but.

I can but, as in “I can but feel,” means can only; can not but, as in “I can not but feel,” means can not do anything except. “I can but feel” (I can only feel), is not so strong a statement as “I can not do anything except feel.” A nice discrimination favors can but when the assertion is not to be made especially emphatic, and can not but when the statement is to be strong.

Cannot and Can not.

Cannot is merely a variant form of can not.

Case of Pronouns after the Verb To be.

See To be.

Casualty.

Casualty is an incorrect form of casualty, meaning a fatal or serious accident, or disaster. Casualty (pronounced cazh'yulty, with the accent on the first syllable), in law, means “an event not to be foreseen, or guarded against.” It is sometimes misspelled casuality.

Chance.

The preposition that is required after the word chance depends upon the meaning to be conveyed. One properly says, “A chance of success,” “A chance for a prize,” “One chance in a thousand.”

Character and Reputation.

Character should not be misused for reputation in such construction as, “The charges presented against him hurt his reputation.”

Chiefest.

Chief, meaning of most importance; foremost, is no longer regarded as admitting of comparison; in consequence, the superlative form chiefest does not accord with good usage.

Claim and Maintain.

Claim in the sense of maintain or assert is always correct if used in the sense of asserting with the added idea of assurance that the thing asserted can be maintained. In ordinary uses, as, "I maintain that I am right," maintain would be preferable unless the speaker wishes to convey the idea that he is making an assertion which can be proved, when "I claim," etc., would be required. (These distinctions are so fine that they should hardly be made, and yet to discriminate in the use of these words may be a tendency in the right direction.)

Climb Up and Climb Down.

Climb indicates ascension; in consequence, "climb down" is censured. There seems, however, to be no good substitute for "climb down."

Clever.

Clever, in the sense of good-natured or obliging, is a colloquialism. As carefully employed, the word means dextrous, talented, or capable.

COLLECTIVE NOUNS.*

A collective noun may be either singular or plural; as, committee, committees. When plural, it always requires a plural verb. When singular, it requires a singular verb, unless special reference is made to the individuals represented by the noun, when it requires a plural verb, thus:

*CORRECT ENGLISH: A COMPLETE GRAMMAR.

A committee has been appointed to draw up the resolutions.

The committee are all of the same opinion.

The board has adjourned.

The board all favor the new project.

The jury has rendered a verdict.

The jury are all at variance with one another.

The class, which has just been graduated, is composed of ten of the brightest young women in the city.

The life class, who were at work in another room, startled by the noise, hastened from their seats, and rushed into an adjoining room.

The Treasury Department has charge of all matters connected with the collection and the disbursement of the public revenue.

The Erecting Department have been working in opposition to one another for several weeks, and, in consequence, the work on the building has been greatly delayed.

Our Connellsville Plant are attending to this matter, and they write that they will soon be able to ship the material.

Some authorities would sanction the following:

“Our Connellsville Plant is attending to this matter, and they,” etc.; but whenever possible, it is better to avoid a shift of number. In other words, in strict usage, both the verb and the pronoun should be of the same number. Thus:

“The syndicate has decided to increase its capital.”

“The syndicate have quarreled among themselves, and, in consequence, much trouble has ensued.”

Come and Go.

Come means to arrive at; go means to depart. The verb come is correctly used to indicate arrival at a place; go, to indicate departure for a place; as, "I will come to see you when I go to the city." "I am going to church on Sunday, and will come to see you immediately after the service."

Commence, Begin, Start.

1. Commence and begin are, in the main, interchangeable in meaning, but the simple Anglo-Saxon begin is usually regarded as preferable. Commence is far more restrictive in its application than is begin. Thus: A tree can begin to grow but not commence to grow (Commence cannot be logically followed by the infinitive.) Again commence or commencement refers merely to some form of action, while begin is not so restricted, it being applicable to the action, state, material, extent, etc. Because of the restrictive application of commence, and because of the adaptability of begin to all ordinary uses, the latter is generally recommended.

Start is interchangeably used with begin, when the meaning is to set out; to enter upon an action, course, or pursuit, as a journey or a race; but the context differs slightly. Thus: "We started early in the morning;" "We began our journey early in the morning."

The use of start, as in the sentence, "The business will start to-morrow," is colloquial.

Commonly, Generally, Frequently, Usually.

Commonly means common to all; generally means that which is done by a large number or by a single person on many occasions; frequently, that which is done at short intervals; usually, that which is customarily done, whether by one or many; that which occurs in the ordinary course of events.

Comic, Comical.

In strict usage, comic means pertaining to comedy in distinction from tragedy; as, a comic play. Comical means fitted to excite mirth; as, "a comical story;" "a comical situation." These words are sometimes interchangeably used in both meanings, but they should be employed only as indicated in the foregoing definition.

Company at Dinner.

"Company at dinner," not "Company for dinner," is the required form. Many persons err in saying, "We are going to have company for dinner," instead of "We are going to have company at dinner."

Compare With and Compare To.

Use "compare with" when representing the relative merits of the things compared; "compare to" when likening one thing to another; thus:

"Compare this cloth with that, and tell me which you prefer."

"Her voice is not to be compared with Patti's."

How can you compare her voice with his; their voices cannot be compared with each other; hers is very inferior to his.

Many poets have compared women to April weather.

Christ compared the sinner to a lost sheep.

Compensation and Remuneration.

Compensation means that which is given or received as an equivalent as for services, debt, loss, etc. Remuneration is a compensation for personal services; as, "The pleasure compensates for the pain," "He was remunerated for his work by an increase in his salary."

Complete and Finished.

Complete means to bring something to a condition or state in which there is nothing new to do; finished means to bring something to an end. Thus: one may finish a dinner, a speech, and complete the building of a house.

Conclude and Decide.

Some authorities indicate that in nice usage, conclude means more especially to arrive at an opinion; decide, to arrive at a determination; as, "I concluded that she had deceived me;" "I decided to go at once."

Concord of Subject and Verb.* See page 206 for exposition.

(For further exposition, See Reference Department.)

Number.

When number is used to express a unit of some sort, it is a singular noun, and, hence, requires a singular verb; when it is used in the sense of several, it is a plural noun, and, hence, requires a plural verb.

SINGULAR.

The number is limited to five.

The number of cases grows less each year.

* CORRECT ENGLISH: A COMPLETE GRAMMAR.

PLURAL.

A number of young ladies were assembled.
(Several young ladies.)

A number of cases have been treated in this way. (Several cases.)

Half, Part, Remainder, Rest.

When half, part, remainder, rest, are used in reference to singular nouns, they are singular, and hence, require singular verbs; when they refer to plural nouns, they are plural, and, hence, require plural verbs; as: "Half of the orange is bad;" "Half of the oranges are bad;" "A part of the book is interesting;" "The greater part of those assembled were invited to remain;" "The remainder (or rest) of the evening was spent in playing cards;" "The remainder (or rest) of the amount due is to be paid in installments;" "The remainder (or rest) of the books were sold at one dollar each;" "The rest of the passengers were uninjured."

Confess and Admit.

In its chief use, confess means to make an admission of wrongdoing; and, as it is a stronger word than admit, the latter is preferable when used merely to acknowledge the truth of a statement, or to acknowledge a mistake. One admits a mistake, acknowledges a fault, and confesses a sin or a wrong. Instead of saying, "I confess that I am entirely ignorant of the facts," one preferably says, "I admit," etc.

Confide In and Confide To.

We confide in a person when we have faith or repose confidence in him; we confide to a person when we entrust a secret to him.

Constant.

Constant (or constantly) is frequently used in the sense of continual or continually, viz., to express that which recurs at regular intervals; but a nice discrimination in the employment of these words restricts constant to express that which is mental or moral; continual, to express that which recurs at regular intervals; as “a constant friend,” “the continual beating of the waves.” See Continual.

Contagious and Infectious.

Contagious means catching; infectious is applied to diseases that are not “catching,” but that are due to climatic, malarious, or other prevailing conditions.

Contemptible and Contemptuous.

Contemptible means deserving of contempt; contemptuous means disdainful; as, “His conduct was contemptible” (deserving of contempt); “His manner was contemptuous” (disdainful; so, “He acted contemptibly (deserving of contempt); “She treated him contemptuously” (disdainfully).

CONTENTS. See p. 216.

Continual and Continuous.

Continual (or continually) is used of an act that is repeatedly renewed; continuous or continuously, of an act that is unceasing; as, “He was subject to continual annoyance” (repeated at close intervals); “He was subject to continuous annoyance” (continued without interruption); “He interrupted her continually while she was writing so that she could not work continuously.”

Contractions.

Contractions, while not permissible in dignified utterance or in formal writing, are in accordance with the conversational employment of the language. The following is the list:

I'm not, you're not, he's not, we're not, they're not, are used in the declarative form, and isn't he (she, or it), aren't you (we, they) in the interrogative. In the declarative form, "You're not, he's not, etc., are preferable to you aren't, he isn't," etc. Am I not is not contracted, ain't being regarded as objectionable for am I not, and as a vulgarism for isn't. See ain't.

"He (she or it) don't" for He (she or it) doesn't," is always incorrect. I don't, you don't, he doesn't, we don't, you don't, they don't, are in accordance with the conversational employment of the language.

Mayn't I (or may I not) is correct in the interrogative form; you can't (or you can not) in the declarative form. In this connection note that may is used when asking and granting permission, and that can, which ordinarily expresses ability, is used in the declarative form when denying permission; thus: "May I go?" "No, you can not."

The contractions shan't and won't are in accordance with the conversational usage of the language.

Shan't you (or shall you not) see her again? (Simple Futurity.)

No; I shan't (or shall not). (Simple Futurity.)

He won't come until next week. (Simple Futurity.)

It won't matter. (Simple Futurity.)

Won't she come to see me? (Simple Futurity.)

No; she won't. (Simple Futurity.)

Contrast.

To is often improperly used after contrast. Instead of saying "contrasted to this," one properly says "contrasted with this."

Convenient and Commodious.

While convenient and commodious are largely interchangeable, a nice discrimination in meaning restricts commodious to apply to that which affords ample accommodation; as, "The room is commodious (affords ample accommodation), and is convenient for my purpose" (suitable for the purpose for which it is used).

Corporeal and Corporal.

Corporeal is used more specifically in the sense of relating to the body; corporal, in the sense of having a body; hence, corporal is the preferred form in such sentences as, "I do not believe in corporal punishment."

Correspond To and With.

Correspond to means answer or conform to; as, "Does this description correspond to your idea of what the place is like?" Correspond with means to communicate with by written word; as, "They correspond with each other."

Cos.

The plural of Co. (abbreviation of company) is Cos. The possessive singular is Co's; the possessive plural is Cos'.

Couple and Two.

Couple means two united; thus: "They (husband and wife) are a congenial couple." "She has two children (not a couple of children).

Creditable and Credible.

Creditable means that which is worthy of credit; credible, that which can be believed; as, "His work is highly credible;" "His story is not credible."

Culture and Cultivation.

Standard says: "Cultivation is now largely superseded by the term 'culture,' which denotes a higher development of the best qualities of man's mental and spiritual nature, with a special reference to the esthetic faculties and to graces of speech and manner, regarded as the expression of a refined nature. Culture in the fullest sense denotes that degree of refinement and development which results from continued cultivation through successive generations."

The term cultured has largely supplanted cultivated in such cases as cultured people, cultured classes, etc.

Cunning.

Cunning, in the sense of artful, ingenious, as "a cunning thief," is correct. The word should not be used to express that which is amusing.

Cupfuls and Teaspoonfuls.

Plurality is indicated by the second syllable in such compounds as, "The receipt calls for three cupfuls of flour and three teaspoonfuls of baking powder."

Three cupful means three cups full, and cups full should be written as two words. Three cupfuls means one cup filled three times. Likewise, three teaspoonful means three teaspoons full, and teaspoons full should be written as two words. Three teaspoonfuls means one spoon filled three times.

Curious.

Curious is the sense of unusual or novel, as, "It is a curious fact," has been censured, but the most eminent critics regard it as correctly used in constructions like the foregoing.

Custom and Habit.

Custom is applied to that which is the result of a voluntary act; habit, to that which has become through custom, involuntary; as, "He followed this custom (that of rising early, for example) until it became a habit." We speak of the customs, not the habits, of a particular body of people; as, "While abroad, he studied the customs of the people and found that where individuals were in the habit of attending early mass, they were industrious and sober."

Cute.

Cute, in the sense of smart, or clever, is a colloquialism, and, in consequence, is not in accordance with the best usage of the language.

D.

Daily Journal.

Journal means daily; in consequence, such wordings as daily, weekly, and monthly journals, are incorrect, daily being superfluous, and weekly and monthly not expressing the meaning. One properly says, for example, "A daily (or weekly) newspaper;" "A monthly (or quarterly) magazine."

Damage.

Damage should not be used in the sense of cost or charge; as, "What is the damage?" "I'll pay the damage," instead of "What is the cost?" "I'll pay the cost." Damage is correctly used in the sense of hurt or injury; as, "No human being can arbitrarily dominate over another without grievous damage to his own nature." The plural form damages, of which the incorrect use of damage is a perversion, is correctly used as a law term, meaning money that is recoverable as amends for a wrong and injury sustained; as, "The plaintiff was awarded merely nominal damages."

Dangerous.

Dangerous is incorrectly used in the sense of "dangerously ill." Instead of saying, "He is worse, but not dangerous," one should say, "He is worse, but not dangerously ill." That which is dangerous is a cause or occasion of danger to other persons or things; as, "The man is dangerous," meaning that he is liable to inflict injury or harm.

Dare and Need.

Dare and need (implying necessity or obligation), without the terminal s, may be used in the third person, singular number of the present tense, provided that they are not followed by the preposition to, used as a part of the infinitive; as, "He dare not go;" "Dare he go?" "He need not go;" "Need he go?" The use of the preposition to is optional in many instances, but, as implied, when used, the presence of the terminal s is obligatory; as: "He dares to think for himself;" "He needs to study."

Daresn't.

As daresn't is properly a contraction of dares not in the third person, singular number, and as dare not is the required form in the second person, singular and plural, "You daresn't" is always incorrect.

"I dare," "You dare," "He (or she) dares" (or dare), is the conjugation of the verb; in consequence, the proper contractions are: "I daren't," "You daren't," "He (or she) daresn't (or daren't)."
Again, "You durstn't" and "He durstn't" (pronounced durssent), frequently employed by careless speakers as a present tense form, is also incorrect, durstn't being a proper contraction of the past tense form durst not, and, consequently, correctly employed only in such constructions as, "She told him that he durstn't go;" "He did not go because he durstn't." (Pronounced dursent.) (Durst not or dared not is the form of the past tense.)

Data.

Data, pronounced either day'ta or da'ta (a as in ask), but not dah'ta (a as in father), is a plural noun; in consequence, constructions like "What is the data in the case?" are incorrect, the plural verb are being required instead.

Date.

Date is incorrectly used in the sense of an engagement; as, "I have a date this evening," instead of "I have an engagement this evening."

Deal.

Deal, in the sense of transaction, agreement, or arrangement, is incorrect. Instead of saying, "I have a deal on hand," one should say, "I have a transaction on hand."

Deal With.

Deal, in the sense of discuss, is properly followed by with, and not by on or of; as, "The subject deals with the necessity for taxation on personal incomes."

Dear and My Dear.

Dear is regarded as less formal than my dear in the salutation of a letter.

Decided and Decisive.

A decided answer is one that is definite; a decisive answer is one that terminates a discussion; as: "I will give you a decided answer this afternoon;" "His answer was decisive and terminated the discussion," meaning that his answer admitted of no further questioning.

Again, a decided victory is not necessarily a decisive victory, a decided victory being one about which there can be no question; a decisive victory, one that terminates a campaign.

Deduction and Induction.

Deduction is that which is deduced from principles or premises; it is the conclusion that we reach when we reason from a principle or law to a fact. Induction is the building up from fact to law; it is the conclusion that we reach when we reason from particular cases to the governing law.

Definite and Definitive.

Definite is similar in meaning to decided; it means fixed or established; especially or precisely prescribed; as, "I have a definite plan." Definitive means final, conclusive; as, "The decision that the two countries have reached is definitive."

Delicious, Delightful.

Delicious pertains to the pleasures of the senses; delightful, to that which charms; as, "A delicious supper;" "A delightful musical."

Delusion and Illusion.

A delusion is a false impression or belief; an illusion is an unreal image that one thinks one sees; as, "He had a delusion that some one was pursuing him;" "The mirage is an optical illusion."

Delighted At, In, With, By.

At.—Satisfaction; as, "I am delighted at the number present to-day." In.—Rejoiced in doing; as, "He delighted in doing good deeds." With.—Greatly pleased with; as, "I am delighted with my new home." By.—To affect with rapture; as, "The ear is delighted by harmony."

Demean and Debase.

Demean means simply to behave. A man may demean himself as a gentleman or as a villain. Debase, on the other hand, means to degrade.

Depository and Depositary.

A nice distinction in their practical use restricts depository to mean a person with whom one deposits something for safe-keeping; depository, a place in which something is deposited.

Depot and Station.

The present tendency is to use station instead of depot to indicate the landing place for passengers at a railroad terminus.

Desire, Want, Wish, Need.

While desire and wish are interchangeably used in many instances to indicate the longing for something regarded as desirable, desire is used of that which is near at hand or in thought; wish, of that which is remote. Again, desire being a Latin derivative is not so simple a word as the Anglo-Saxon wish; in consequence, desire is used more especially of the higher things or of those which are coveted. We desire wealth, distinction, honor, fame; we wish to visit a friend. Want is used of that which may be simply lacking or which may be both lacking and necessary; need is used of that which is lacking and necessary. One may want a new garment, but may not need it. Want should not be interchangeably used with wish. One properly says, "I wish to see you," not "I want to see you."

Despatch and Dispatch.

Dispatch, etymologically considered, is the correct spelling, but despatch has so largely displaced it, that it now takes precedence over the other.

Die.

One dies of a disease; from hunger; by violence; for another or for one's country. One should not say, "He died with pneumonia;" but "He died of pneumonia."

Different Than or To.

Different than, or to is always incorrect, from being required instead; as, "This is different from that."

Differently is likewise followed by from; as, "This book is bound differently from that."

Differ From and Differ With.

"Differ from" is used in the sense of "different from" to express a difference; as: "Character differs from reputation;" "I differ from him in my political views." "Differ with" is used to express disagreement by word of mouth; dispute; as, "They differ with each other every time that they meet."

Direct and Address.

Direct, in the sense of address as to direct a letter, is criticised by some writers, but this use is recorded as correct. Possibly the tendency to employ address to the exclusion of direct, is one that should be encouraged.

Direct and Directly.

Direct is an adverb as well as an adjective. As an adverb, it is used interchangeably with the adverb directly to indicate in a straight line or course; as: "He went direct to the point," "He went directly to the point;" "Ship the goods direct from St. Louis," or "Ship the goods directly from St. Louis." Direct is construed as an adjective in such sentences as, "Make the shipment direct (shipment [to be] direct; that is, a direct shipment); and, as an adverb would not conform to the requirements of grammar in constructions of this kind, di- rectly would be incorrect. When the idea to be conveyed is without the intervention of any medium, directly more closely expresses the meaning, direct not being used in this sense; as: "He voted directly, and not through a representative;" "Please correspond with me directly in this matter."

Directly and Immediately.

Directly, in the sense of immediately, as, "I will come directly," is correct. When used in the sense of as soon as, both, directly and immediately are objectionable. Instead of "Directly he arrived, he called on his employer," as soon as should be used.

Disappoint.

Disappoint implies defeat; frustration; in consequence, it should not be used of that which is agreeable; as, "We feared that it would rain, but we were agreeably disappointed." "Agreeably surprised" is the correct form.

Discern, Discriminate, Distinguish.

Discern is "to see apart;" discriminate is "to judge apart;" and distinguish is "to mark apart, or recognize by some marked difference;" as, "He discerned a difference between the two propositions; he discriminated in favor of the first, and distinguished the difference by pointing out the characteristics of each."

Discommode and Incommode.

Discommode in the sense of incommode or inconvenience is now obsolete. Instead of saying, "I fear that I shall discommode you," one should say, "I fear that I shall incommode (or inconvenience) you."

Disinterested and Uninterested.

Disinterested is "wanting in self-interest," uninterested, "wanting in interest."

Dislike and Hate.

See Hate.

Dislike Him Worse.

See Worse and More.

Disremember.

Disremember in the sense of forget is incorrect.

Distant and Remote.

See Remote.

Do So.

Do so is correct when the speaker wishes to avoid repeating some preceding word. While some critics object to the substitutionary use of do and so, these words are correctly employed in such constructions as, "We can begin at once provided those who were asked to take part in the program are ready to do so."

Donate.

Donate is properly used when the gift is important; otherwise, give is required; as, "He donated a large sum to the church;" "He gave five dollars to the fresh air fund."

Don't Think.

In strict usage, "I think that I shall not," not "I don't think that I shall," is the correct form; but, as "I don't think" has the sanction of almost universal employment, it should not be censured.

For special uses of don't, see, respectively, Contractions, Double Negatives, Doubt whether and Doubt that.

Double Negatives.

Double negatives like can't hardly, don't hardly, isn't but one, are incorrect. Instead of these wordings, one should say, for example, "I can hardly wait for him;" "I hardly know what to do." "There is but one more left."

DOUBLE POSSESSIVES.*

The term "double possessive" applies to nouns that indicate possession in a two-fold way; first, by the use of the preposition of; and, secondly, by a change in themselves and by the use of the preposition of as well; as by an internal change, in the case of some pronouns, or by the addition of the apostrophe and the letter s; thus: "She is a friend of my aunt's."

Rule.—Use the apostrophe and the letter s (or change the form) only when the noun (or pronoun) itself represents the possessor. Thus:

1. This is a picture of John's. (John's picture; that is, John possesses it.)

2. This is a picture of John. (John merely sat for it.)

3. This is a criticism of John's. (John's criticism; that is, John wrote it.)

4. This is a criticism of John. (Some one else wrote it about John.)

5. This is an opinion of John's. (John's opinion; that is, John uttered it.)

6. This is an opinion of John. (Some one else uttered it.)

To summarize, double possession is strictly correct even when there is but one person or thing possessed, except in cases where double possession would convey a meaning opposite to the one intended, as in the second, fourth and sixth sentences.

FURTHER EXAMPLES.

He is a friend of the Bank's. (One of several friends.)

He is an enemy of mine. (One or more possessed by me.)

He is a brother of mine. (One or more possessed by me.)

He is a friend of hers. (One or more possessed by her.)

I cannot endure that rasping voice of Bridget's. (One voice.)

He is an employee of my uncle's. (One or more possessed by my uncle.)

When the article the is used instead of a, double possession is not employed; thus: "This was the home of Longfellow. (Not Longfellow's.)

This is the birthplace of the President. (Not President's.)

This is private office of the Secretary. (Not Secretary's.)

Doubt In My Mind.

"In my mind" is superfluous in the sentence, "I don't doubt in my mind that he will come."

Doubt Whether and Doubt That.

Doubt whether and doubt that are equally correct, but they express slightly variant meanings. "I doubt whether (or not) I shall go," conveys the meaning not only that I doubt that I shall go, but also that I doubt that I shall not go (doubt that I shall stay); whereas, "I doubt that I shall go," expresses doubt only as to my going. So with the expressions, "I don't know whether (or not) he has come," and "I don't know that he has come," the second form expresses doubt only as to the coming. In other words, the use of whether implies an alternative; whereas, the use of that expresses no alternative. Possibly the distinction in meaning is so slight that we may regard it as a distinction with hardly a difference.

Doubt That and Doubt But That.

But is always superfluous when used with doubt. One may say, "I doubt that he will come," or "I don't doubt that he will come;" but adding nothing to the meaning. In the sentence, "I do not know that I shall go," a meaning is conveyed opposite to that in "I do not know but that I shall go; but not being superfluous in the second sentence. In the foregoing, but is properly used to convey a specific meaning: "I do not know that I shall go" (not certain about going); "I do not know but that I shall go" (inclined to think that I shall go). But what is correct only when the meaning is but that which; as, "I have nothing but what I brought in my trunk."

Dove and Dived.

Dived is the preferred form in the past tense; as, "He dived into the lake." Dived is the required form in the perfect tenses; as, "He has (or had) dived;" "They have (or had) dived."

Draft and Draught.

A draft is an order for the payment of money; it is also the preferred spelling for a current of air.

Drank and Drunk.

Drank is correctly used in the past tense; drunk, in the perfect tenses; as, I drank a glass of water," "I have (or had) drunk," etc. "He has (or had drunk)," etc.

See Have, Has, and Had.

Drive and Ride.

A nice distinction restricts drive to express motion in a carriage; ride, motion on horseback or in a public conveyance. An Englishman drives only when the vehicle is one that permits of his holding the reins, whether he actually does so or not; otherwise, he rides; in consequence, he drives, for example, in a phaeton, a cart, or a dray, but rides in a brougham, in a public conveyance, or on horseback. In this country, so fine a distinction hardly exists, drive being used of all conveyances propelled by horses, except public ones; in consequence, one would drive in a Victoria, brougham, or cart, and ride in a public conveyance, an automobile or on horseback.

Due To.

Although due is censured by some writers as being carelessly employed in the sense of owing, this use is recorded as correct. The following is suggested by those who would restrict due to mean that which is to be given or paid; owing, to indicate the source of some existing condition; as, "This explanation is due to you." "The accident was owing to carelessness."

E.

Each, Every, and their compounds each one, every one or everybody, should never be used with plural verbs or pronouns. One properly says: "Each of the children has his own room;" "Each one knows his own affairs better than any one else;" "Every child should do what his teacher tells him to do;" "Every one has his peculiarities." Such constructions as, "Each of the children have their own room," "Each one knows their own affairs," etc., are incorrect. See Concord of Subject and Verb, Rule 3.

Each Other and One Another.

Each other is properly used of only two persons; one another, of more than two; as: "The two children love each other dearly;" "The three sisters are devoted to one another." Each, without other may be used of several; as, "Each pupil is requested to remain after school."

Eat, Ate, Eaten.

In the most approved usage, eat is used as a present or a future tense form; ate, as a past tense, and eaten as a perfect tense and also a present and a past tense in the passive voice; as: "Eat your breakfast;" "I shall eat my breakfast later;" "I ate my breakfast at seven o'clock;" "I have just eaten my breakfast." "Was the bread eaten?" "Has the cake been eaten?"

Eat (pronounced et) is recorded as a past tense form, but precedence is given to ate; in the perfect tense, eat (et) is recorded as sometimes used; but, as indicated, ate and eaten are, respectively, the approved forms for the past and perfect tenses, also the present and past tenses of the passive voice, they being almost universally employed by cultured speakers.

Effect and Affect.

See Affect.

Either and Neither, He or She Is.

See Concord of Subject and Verb, Rule 10.

Either, Neither, and Anyone.

See Neither, Either, etc.

Either and Each or Both.

Either is improperly used in the sense of each or both. Instead of saying, "Flowers grew on either side of the path," one should say, "Flowers grew on each side" or "on both sides of the path."

Either He or I Am.

See Concord of Subject and Verb.

Elder, Eldest; Older, Oldest.

Elder and eldest are used only of persons; older and oldest of both persons and things. Again, elder and eldest apply only to members of the same family, while older and oldest are not so restricted. One properly says: "John is the elder of the two brothers;" "Mary is the eldest of the three sisters;" "His eldest son attends college;" "My elder brother is not at home;" "Of the two pupils, John is the older;" "Mary is the oldest of the three friends;" "His is the oldest house in town." In comparisons followed by than, older, and not elder, is required even when applied to members of the same family; as, "John is older than his sister."

Elegant.

Elegant should not be used in the sense of excellent, delicious, or delightful; as, “an elegant dinner (or pudding);” “an elegant program;” etc. “An excellent dinner;” “a delicious pudding;” “an excellent (delightful or entertaining) program,” are the required forms. One properly speaks of “an elegant gown;” “an elegant apartment;” elegant denoting that which is in faultless taste, characterized by refinement, grace, or symmetry.

Else and But.

Else is properly followed by than, and not by but. One correctly says: “It was no one else (or no other) than he;” or, “It was no one but him.” (Observe that the nominative he follows than, and that the objective him follows but.)

Else’s.

See Anybody Else’s.

Emerge and Immerge.

To emerge is to come out or proceed from something; to immerge is to disappear; to plunge into something; as, “The stag emerged from the shadow of the trees;” “The moon suddenly immerged behind the clouds;” “The boat suddenly immerged, but soon reappeared.” (Note the spelling of the two words.)

Emigrant and Immigrant.

An emigrant is one that leaves a place for another locality; an immigrant is one that enters a new locality; as, “Several thousand emigrants leave Europe every month for America;” “Several thousand immigrants arrive each month at New York from Europe.” (Note the spelling of the two words.)

Eminence, Eminent; Imminence, Imminent; Immanence, Immanent.

Eminence means an elevated place; a high degree; as, "He was unable to reach the eminence that he sought;" eminent means distinguished; as, "He is an eminent lawyer." Imminence means impending danger; as, "The imminence of his peculiar situation did not alarm him;" imminent means threatening to happen; as, "He was in imminent danger of losing his life." Immanence means a permanent abiding within; in theology it means the essential presence of God in all the universe; as, "The Christian doctrine of the divine immanence is the essence of all religion; immanent means indwelling; inherent; as, "The immanent qualities of a religion determine its character."

En and In.

As an affix, when en and in are both recorded, precedence is given to in in the spelling of inquire, inquirer, inquiry, by both Century and Standard. In the spelling of inclose, Century prefers "inclose," Standard, "enclose." In "endorse" and "indorse," Century favors "indorse;" Standard records that the affix in is preferable in legal and commercial use; en, in literary use." To simplify the matter, it might be well to use the affix in in all these words and follow this style invariably; as: inquire, inquirer, inquiry; inclose, indorse.

Enclose and Inclose.

See En and In.

Enclosed (Inclosed) please find.

Please is criticised by some writers as superfluous in the expression, "Enclosed (Inclosed)

please find my check." Inasmuch as please softens the imperative form it should hardly be criticised. The difficulty can be overcome by substituting the shorter wording, "I (or we) inclose," etc.

Enclose (Inclose) Herewith.

Herewith is superfluous in the wording, "I inclose herewith." It might be well to eliminate it and write simply, "I inclose."

Endorse and Indorse.

See En and In.

Endorse (Indorse) and Approve.

Endorse (indorse) should not be used in the sense of approve. Instead of saying, "I indorse his conduct in this matter," one should say, "I approve of his conduct in this matter."

Endwise.

See Lengthwise and Sidewise.

Enthuse.

Enthuse is recorded as a slang expression. Instead of saying, "I was greatly enthused," one should say, "My enthusiasm was aroused."

Epithet.

An epithet is merely an appellation, and it may be one of condemnation or of praise. To say, "He used several epithets," is an ambiguous expression. A qualifying adjective like villifying or complimentary is required.

Equally as.

As is superfluous when preceded by equally, for the reason that as itself expresses equality. One properly says, "I like this equally well as that," or, "I like this as well as that," but not "I like this equally as well as that."

Er and Or.

1. Er is both an English and a Latin suffix. The English suffix er was originally attached to verbs to form nouns expressing the agent or doer; as "reader," "renter." Although usually employed to denote a person, it may also indicate an inanimate object; as, "heater," "poker. Or is a Latin suffix, and is attached to derivatives denoting either persons or inanimate objects; as, "confessor," "radiator." Latin derivatives in or are often interchangeably spelled with er; as, "confessor" or "confesser;" "instructor," "instructer." A rule which, however, has its exceptions distinguishes Latin derivatives ending in or from English words ending in er; as: (Latin) "instructor;" (English) "teacher." Again or is used with the names of places to signify an inhabitant of the place; as, "New Yorker," "Londoner," "New Englander."

2. The Latin suffix er is not, as a rule, associated with nouns formed from verbs. It usually indicates the person or doer; as, "commissioner," "prisoner."

Eruption and Irruption.

An eruption is a bursting forth; an irruption is an invasion. (Note the spelling of the two words.)

Especial and Special; Especially and Specially.

Especial and special are interchangeable in meaning, but special is more common. In some of their meanings, especially and specially are interchangeable, as, for example, in such sentences as, "He is specially interested," etc., or "He is especially interested." Specially, however, has another meaning in which it is not synonymous with especially, as, in the sense of a particular reason or purpose, by special or exceptional action or proceeding; as, "An officer was specially designated to see that the law was enforced." In regard to the respective uses of especially and specially, Century gives the following: Especially is for rhythmical reasons (because it occurs most frequently at the beginning of a dependent clause, where usually an unaccented particle occurs, and where, therefore, a word with an accent on the first syllable is instinctively avoided) much more common than specially.

Ess.

See Authoress, Editress, Doctress, Lectress.

Etc.

Etc. should not be repeated; as, for example, "nouns, pronouns, etc., etc." Again, etc. must not be used unless the omitted context is definitely understood.

Eternal and Everlasting.

Eternal applies to that which has no beginning or end; everlasting, to that which has no end and which may or may not have had a beginning. A nice use would restrict eternal to apply to that which has no beginning nor end; everlasting, to that which has a beginning, but no end.

Evenings.

See Mornings.

Ever So and Never So.

Ever, used as an adverb and followed by so, to mean very, exceedingly is correctly employed in such constructions as, "He is ever so rich." Ever is recorded also as meaning to whatever extent; to whatever degree; for this reason, ever so is now commonly employed in the sense of never so, meaning also to whatever extent; no matter how. Some authorities indicate that ever so should not displace never so when extent or degree is implied, but other writers equally authoritative sanction this use, so that one may say, "Be he ever so rich, a man should not be idle;" that is, to whatever extent a man may be rich, he should not be idle. Never so is virtually an idiom with an elliptical comparison understood, the real meaning being, not ever (never) so (rich, great, etc.) as in the supposed case. Because of this meaning, some authorities indicate that one should discriminate between the uses of ever so and never so, reserving ever so to express the emphatic very or exceedingly, and never so, the elliptical comparison, using never, not as an adverb of degree but as an adverb of time,—not ever so (rich, great) as in the supposed case; as, "If he run never so fast, he can not catch the train; that is, if he run so fast as he never before ran," etc. This very nice distinction, however, is confusing and unnecessary. It is better to avoid the use of never so, and permit ever so to be used in its stead, construing it to mean very, or exceedingly, or no matter how, as the case may require.

Every Confidence.

Every should not be used in the sense of entire or implicit, or without the adjective kind, or some modifying word; as, "I have every confidence in him;" "He gave me every attention." "Entire (or implicit) confidence" and "Every kind of attention" are the correct forms. Every is distributive, and in consequence can not modify a noun incapable of being separated into parts.

Every Once in a While.

Instead of using such expressions as, "I go there every once in a while," one properly says, "I go there once in a while," or "I go there now and then" or "I go there every little while." "Once in a while" is a meaningless phrase.

Every Which Way.

"Every which way" is incorrect for every way; in all directions. Instead of saying, "He ran every which way," one should say, "He ran in all directions."

Evidence and Testimony.

Evidence is a legal term. It applies to all the means by which the truth is made manifest. Testimony is merely a species of evidence.

Except and Excepting.

Except and excepting (preposition) are interchangeably used; as, "I have finished all except (or excepting) this."

Excessively.

Excessively is incorrectly used for exceedingly in such expressions as, "The weather is excessively warm;" "The weather is exceedingly warm" is the required form, excessively meaning an excess of that which should not be exceeded.

Excite and Incite.

Excite means to produce agitation; incite, to arouse to action; as, "His words excited the people and eventually incited them to tear down the edifice."

Excuse Me and Pardon Me.

"Excuse me" is nicely used when one wishes to leave the room; "pardon me," when one apologizes for a breach of etiquette.

Executer and Executor.

An executer is one that performs an act; an executor is an administrator of an estate.

Exodus.

Exodus applies to the outgoing of a large number of persons; as, "The exodus of the Israelites." Exit applies to one's departure from a room or house; as, "His exit from the room was hasty;" departure applies to one's leaving the city; as, "His departure from Chicago was sudden."

Experience.

Although experience has been criticised by some writers as incorrectly employed in the sense of to suffer or receive, this use is recorded as correct. In other words, when applied to the feelings, experience, whether used as a verb or a noun, is correctly used; as, "He experienced joy" (hope, sorrow, and the like).

Expect and Suppose.

See Suppose.

Extend.

In nice usage, extend should not be used for send in such construction as, "I am going to extend an invitation to her to visit me;" "I am going to send," etc., being the correct form. Extend means to stretch, to expand, to continue, to prolong; as, "to extend roads;" "to extend the territories of a kingdom;" "to extend the sphere of usefulness;" "to extend the time of payment."

(Extend is also used in the sense of offer; to bestow; as, to extend the hospitality of one's home.)

F.Family.

When the family is referred to as an entity, a singular verb is used; when the individuals of the family are referred to, a plural verb is required; as: "My family is going abroad;" "My family are all well."

Farther and Further.

In nice usage, farther expresses distance; further, that which is additional; as: "Shall we walk farther?" or, figuratively, "I shall not proceed farther in the matter;" "I have nothing further to say."

Fault (at or in).

A person is at fault when he makes a mistake; in fault when he is to blame.

Favor and Letter.

Letter is regarded by many as preferable to favor because of its definiteness of expression. Instead of writing, "I have your favor of the 21st instant," write "I have your letter," etc.

Favor, however, is recorded as correctly used in the sense of letter. As an overworked term, it might be well to avoid its use.

Feel badly.

See Bad and Badly.

Female.

Female is properly used as the correlative of male; as, "Statistics show that the state has several thousand more females than males." Female, as a correlative of man, is always incorrect. Instead of "The females of the community," women is the required form. Again, female, as a synonym of feminine, is always incorrect, the latter term properly being used when mental characteristics of women are referred to; as, "She possessed many feminine traits common to woman," not "She possessed many female traits," etc. Again, female is used as a term of contempt; as, "The mob was composed in the main of females."

Fermentation and Fomentation.

Fermentation is a chemical decomposition of matter, and, by extension, when used in a figurative sense, means excitement or agitation. Fomentation is the act of warming with heated water, and, figuratively, means incitement, instigation, or encouragement. Macaulay writes: "The founders of the English Church wrote and acted in an age of violent intellectual fermentation;" and Young: "And dive in science for distinguished names, Dishonest fomentation of your pride."

Fetch.

Fetch means to go and bring; in consequence, we should say either "Go and bring me a book from the library," or "Fetch me a book from the library," but not "Go and fetch me a book," etc.

Few and A Few.

See A Few and Few.

Fewer and Less.

Fewer applies to number; less, to size; as: "There were fewer than four members present;" "He has less difficulty now than formerly."

Figure, used in the sense of amount, as, "I will not sell the property at that figure," instead of "I will not sell the property for that amount," has been criticised by some authorities, but it is recorded as correctly used in this sense, it having the sanction of both literary and business usage.

Final.

Final is used of that which is ended or completed; in consequence, such expressions as "The final end" or "The final completion" are incorrect, final being superfluous.

Financial, Monetary, Pecuniary.

Financial applies to public funds, to the revenues of a government, or to large private transactions. Monetary and pecuniary apply to transactions between individuals. Monetary relates more especially to actual money, a monetary transaction being one in which money is involved. Pecuniary relates to that in which money is indirectly involved; as, one's pecuniary affairs, difficulties, etc. We speak properly of the financial affairs of the government; of monetary transactions between individuals; of giving pecuniary aid to an individual.

Financial and Fiscal.

The fiscal year, referring to the financial accounting done in a year's time, in the affairs of a nation or of a private business, is preferable to the financial year. (In the United States, the fiscal year ends June 30.)

Finish and Complete.

See Complete.

Finished.

Instead of saying, "I am through my breakfast," one should say, "I have finished my breakfast."

First-rate.

First-rate is an adjective, and, in strict usage, should be employed only when it can modify a noun; as, "This is a first-rate book." In colloquial use, first-rate is employed as an adverb; as, "This works first-rate"; but this is a loose employment of the word.

First.

First is superfluous in such constructions as, "I must first write a letter before I can go."

First Two and Last Two.

The first two and The last two are correct when more than two persons or things are under consideration. Inasmuch as there cannot be two firsts or two lasts, it is obvious that the wording should be as indicated.

Firstly.

Firstly is always incorrect, first being the form of both the adjective and the adverb.

First, Second, etc.; First, Secondly, etc.

The adjectives first, second, third, etc., are required when the noun is modified; the adverbs first, secondly, thirdly, etc., when the verb is modified; as: "The following are my reasons: first, I have no time to give to the matter; second, I know of no one whom I can recommend; third," etc. (First reason, second reason, third reason.) "The disturbance was caused first by the explosion of the boiler; secondly, etc.; thirdly," etc. (Was caused first, secondly, etc.)

Folk and Folks.

Folk is a collective noun and is used in the sense of either people or peoples; as, "The English are virtually the same people or folk as the Dutch, both belonging to the same division,—the Low German of the Teutonic Branch of the Aryan Family." Folks is used in the sense of persons; as, "The young folks of the church;" "The poor folks of the town;" "The old folks at home;" "How are your folks?" The pluralizing of folks has been censured by some authorities, but the criticism is unwarrantable, folks used in the sense of persons being recorded as unobjectionable.

Fish and Fowl.

Fish is a collective as well as a singular noun; in consequence, one properly says, "I caught a fish;" "We had a large catch of fish" (many, several). The plural form fishes is used when not thought of collectively; as, "How should you like to live in the sea where all the fishes are swimming about?"

Fix.

Fix is properly used to mean to put into thorough adjustment or repair. Such expressions as, "He is in a bad fix," meaning embarrassed financially or otherwise, are not in accordance with good usage. Again, fix, in the sense of put, set, or arrange, is criticised. Instead of, "Fix the flowers in the vase," one should say, "Put (or arrange) the flowers in a vase." Fix meaning to injure, and fix up, to dress elegantly, are vulgarisms.

Forbid From.

From is incorrectly used in such constructions as, "I forbid you from going to such places;" "I forbid your going" or "I forbid you to go" being the correct form.

Former and Latter.

Former and latter are properly used when referring to two persons or things. When confusion might arise from the use of these terms, they must be avoided. Such constructions as the following are confusing: "Mr. Brown said that his employer wished him to call on the superintendent, but the former would not say what the business was about." It is impossible to determine to what the word former refers.

For You and Me.

The objective me, not the nominative I, is required in such constructions as, "This is for you and me," the preposition for requiring to be followed by the objective case (me, her, him, us, them).

For and To.

For and to are superfluous in such constructions as, "The house cost more than you think for;" "Where is he going to?"

Forward and Forwards.

Forward and forwards are used interchangeably as opposed to forward and backwards. See backward and backwards.

Four and Five Is or Are.

The following constructions puzzle many who do not know whether is or are is required; thus:

1. Four and five (is or are) nine.
2. Four plus five (is or are) nine.
3. Eight less five (is or are) three.
4. Four times five (is or are) twenty.
5. One-half of eight (is or are) four.
6. Eight divided by two (is or are) four.

In the first construction, the plural verb are is required, because the subject is grammatically compound; that is, there are two subject nouns connected by and in such a way as to form a plural subject. (In this connection, note that and used as a connective between two subject nouns does not always make the subject plural.)

In the second and third constructions, the singular verb is is required, the words four and eight being regarded as entities—singular in sense. In these constructions, there is an ellipsis, in each case, of the preposition by; thus: "Four plus (more) by five is nine;" "Eight less by five is three."

In the fourth construction, the plural form times makes the plural verb are preferable. This sentence may be construed as follows: "Four times (repetitions) of five are twenty."

In the fifth construction, the subject half is singular and so takes a singular verb. (Half is singular or plural, according to the context; and, inasmuch as eight may be regarded as an entity, half in this sentence may be construed as singular. See Half, CONCORD OF SUBJECT AND VERB.)

In the sixth construction, eight is the subject noun, modified by the participial phrase, "divided by two." Eight being regarded as an entity, is construed as singular, and, hence, takes a singular verb.

Full.

Full is regarded as incapable of comparison. A full cup, for example, cannot be fuller. However, there is a growing tendency to compare such words as full, perfect, complete and the like, the positive form being regarded as expressing that which is nearly full, perfect, complete.

Fragrance and Aroma.

Fragrance and aroma are both defined as an agreeable odor; but, in nice usage, fragrance is used of fresh, delicate, and delicious odors, especially such as emanate from living things, while aroma is more restrictively employed to denote a somewhat spicy odor; as, "The fragrance of new-mown hay;" "of fresh flowers;" "the aroma of coffee."

Funny.

Funny, in the sense of queer, is not in accordance with the best usage of the language. One should avoid the use of funny to express that which is queer or unusual, and restrict it to express that which is provocative of fun.

From Hence, Thence, Whence.

From is superfluous in the phrases, "from hence," "from thence," "from whence," the preposition being implied.

G

Generally.

See Commonly.

Genius and Genus.

Genius implies the possession of rare natural gifts; genus means a class or kind.

Give and Donate.

See Donate.

Go.

Such expressions as, "I cannot go that person," "I will go one dollar," are always to be avoided in refined society.

Go Back On.

"Go back on" for abandon is not in accordance with good usage.

Going to Do for About to Do.

The phrase going to do for about to do in such constructions as, "I am just going to play," instead of, "I am just about to play," is censured by some authorities; but the criticism is hardly justifiable, going, in the sense of about to do, being recorded as correct. "I am about to sing," "I shall travel this fall," may be preferred by some; but, as indicated, the other forms are recorded as correct.

Go and Bring.

See Fetch.

Go and Come.

See Come.

Going to Go.

To go is superfluous in the sentence, "I am going to go," "I am going" fully expressing the meaning.

Good and Well.

Good is an adjective, and, in consequence, it must not be used with verbs of action where the adverb well is required. One properly says, "He plays well" (not good). Well is also an adjective, and, in consequence, one may say, "You look well," "I feel well," look and feel being verbs of inaction in these constructions. "I feel good," "You look good," do not express the meaning so closely as do, "I feel well," "You look well," for the reason that well, in this use, refers more especially to a physical condition; good, to a moral condition.

Gotten and Got.

Gotten can be used as well as got when not used to express obligation or necessity, as, "I have got (or gotten) to a place where I need more assistance." See Century and Standard.

In this connection, note that when either possession or obligation is to be expressed, got is always superfluous; thus: "I have my purse" (not "I have got my purse"); "I have to go" (not "I have got to go").

Graduated.

A student does not graduate himself, but is graduated from an institution of learning; in consequence, one says, for example, "He was graduated last June." There is an increasing tendency, however, to use the active form (graduated) instead of the passive (was graduated), with the result that the active form is becoming established.

Grammar (Good and Bad).

See Bad Grammar.

Grow.

Although censured by some critics, grow in the sense of become, as "to grow small," is recorded as in conformity with good usage.

Guess, Suppose, Think.

Guess is used when an opinion is based merely upon probable grounds; as, "See whether you can guess who he is." Suppose is used when an opinion is based upon grounds that one has good reason to believe exist; as, "I suppose that he will come." Think is used when an opinion is reached after one has given a subject thought, but where one is not in possession of exact knowledge; as, "I think that he will come."

H.Habit and Custom.

See Custom.

Had Better.

"I had better go," is incorrect according to the grammar of the language, but correct according to its usage; that is, the usage of cultured and educated speakers and writers. "I had better go" and "I had rather go," are changed forms of the old English, "I had liefer to go"; but, in modern usage, they have undergone transformation.

"We were liefer die," was the Anglo-Saxon form, meaning to me it would be dearer to die; but from the time of Chaucer, "I had liefer" was the more common idiom; from 1550 to the present time, "I had rather" or "I had better."

"I would better" and "I would rather," have been urged by reformers, as syntactical expressions, but the usage of the language is rather in favor of the idiom. "Had better" and "had best" are interchangeably used and are equally correct.

Had Have.

Had have, or, as it is often pronounced, haduv, is always incorrect. Instead of saying, "If I had have (or haduv) known, I should not have gone," one properly says, "If I had known," etc. Have is, of course, properly used before had; as, "I have had a very pleasant time."

Had Ought.

Had ought is always incorrect. One properly says, "I ought to have done so," "I ought not to have done so," not "had ought," etc.

Hain't.

Hain't is a vulgarism. It is never excusable for haven't or hasn't.

Half.

See Concord of Subject and Verb, Half, Part, Remainder, Rest. P. 37.

Half and Halves.

The expressions "Cut the apple in half" or "Cut the apple into halves" are equally correct. As there cannot be more than two halves, two is superfluous in the sentence, "Cut the apple into two halves."

Handful.

The same rule that applies to the formation of cupful applies also to handful. See Cupful.

Handy and Convenient.

Handy is properly used of that upon which one may lay one's hand; also used of persons that are ready for immediate service; as, "My fountain pen is very handy." "He is a handy boy to have in the house." Convenient is correct to use when referring to that which is near by; as, "It is very convenient to live near the city."

Happen and Transpire.

Happen means to occur; transpire, to make known. Instead of saying, "Tell me what has transpired in my absence," one properly says, "Tell me what has happened (or occurred)," etc.

Happen in.

"Happen in" is colloquially used in the sense of "to make a chance visit." There is no special objection to the phrase, but some speakers prefer to say, for example, "A friend of mine chanced to call," instead of "A friend of mine happened in."

Hardly.

See Double Negatives, Can't and Don't Hardly.

Hardly and Scarcely.

Hardly proper refers to degree; scarcely, to quantity; as, "I hardly see how I can go;" "I have scarcely enough silk for my gown."

Hasten; Hurry.

Hasten is used to express quickness of motion; an increase of activity in motion; hurry conveys the same idea, but it is nicely used to convey the additional idea of confusion; as, "I hasten to answer your letter by return mail;" "Hurry as fast as you can or you will miss the train."

Hate and Dislike.

Instead of saying, "I hate to go there," one properly says, "I dislike to go there." We dislike to do that which is disagreeable. We hate that for which we have an extreme aversion.

Have or Has.

For the number of the verb in such constructions as, "This is one of the most interesting books that have ever been written," see Concord of Relative Pronoun and Verb.

Have, Has, and Had.*

Use have, has, and had only with the participle, not with the past tense form; as: "I have sung," "I have drunk," not "I have sang," "I have drank." (Observe that the two a's are not to be used together.) The following sentences are illustrative:

Sang, Sung.

I sang at a concert last evening.

I have sung in public several times.

He had sung twice before I arrived.

Sank, Sunk.

The boat immediately sank to the bottom.

The boat has sunk.

The boat had sunk before I arrived.

I have sunk all the money that I intend to sink in this enterprise.

Shrank, Shrunk.

My bathing-suit shrank the first time I wore it.

My bathing-suit has not shrunk. It might have shrunk had not my dressmaker shrunk the goods before making the suit.

When goods are shrunk before they are washed, they will not shrink much, if any, afterwards.

Sprang, Sprung.

I sprang to her assistance, but some one else had sprung before me.

Has the boat sprung a leak?

Swam, Swum.

I swam half way across the lake this morning.

If I had swum as long as you swam this morning I should be ill now.

He has swum across the river five times this summer; I have swum across only once.

Note—The same rule obtains in the use of began and begun.

I began this letter yesterday.

He began to show signs of fatigue.

I have begun to study French.

They had begun to sing before I arrived.

Has the lecture begun?

This work was begun in the Spring.

In the passive form, is sung, sunk, etc., was sung, sunk, etc., is required.

Note—In connection with sang, sank, shrank, sprang, swam, note that a second spelling of the words is recorded; thus, sang or sung, sank or sunk, shrank or shrunk, sprang or sprung, swam or swum; but as these spellings are given a secondary position, only the first spellings (sang, sank, shrank, etc.) are used by careful speakers; that is, of course, when mere past time is indicated (without the use of have, has or had).

A secondary spelling, begun, is recorded in Century, as sometimes used as a past tense form; began, however, is always preferable, begun being properly restricted to uses as indicated above.

He, She, Him, Her.

See Case of Pronouns.

Have Ever.*

The auxiliary have is required in such constructions as, "This is the most interesting book that I have ever read," as it includes all time up to the present, while the past tense is used to indicate, more especially, a specified time in the past; as, "I read the book yesterday." Thus:

Past Tense.

(A specific time in the past.)

I saw him yesterday.

I saw him on Monday.

I bought the hat when in New York.

I bought the trunk in Paris.

I received your letter yesterday.

Present-Perfect Tense.

(Time reaches to the present.)

I have just seen him.

I have never seen him.

This is the best hat that I have ever bought.

I have just received your letter.

Further Illustrations.

He is one of the finest men that I have ever known. (Not "that I ever knew.")

She is one of the prettiest girls that I have ever seen. (Not "that I ever saw.")

This is one of the most interesting books that I have ever read. (Not "that I ever read.")

It was one of the saddest sights that I have ever seen. (Not "that I ever saw.")

Have you ever met him? (Not "Did you ever meet him?")

Have you ever seen him? (Not "Did you ever see him?")

Have you ever read it? (Not "Did you ever read it?")

I have never met him. (Not "I never met him.")

I have never seen him. (Not "I never saw him.")

I have never read it. (Not "I never read it.")

Do not use ever or never with the simple past tense unless a period of time is covered. Thus, while one cannot properly say, "Did you ever see him?" one may say, "Did you ever see him while in Paris?"

Ever and never, meaning at any time, at no time, may be used with either the past, the present or the future tense when a period of time is indicated, as, "Did you ever see Bernhardt while in Paris?" "Do you ever meet him on the street?" "Shall you ever go abroad?" "I never saw Bernhardt while in Paris, but I have seen her since." "I never meet him on the street, but I often see him at his home." "I shall never go abroad." Such expressions as, "I never said any such thing" are colloquial, never being incorrectly used as an emphatic not.

Have Got.

See Got.

Haven't Only.

"Have only," not "haven't only," is correct; as, for example, "I have only one more," double negation being expressed by "haven't only."

Healthful and Healthy.

In nice usage, healthful means conducive to health; healthy means possessing health; as: "Outdoor exercise is very healthful;" "The child is very healthy."

The following is the record:

Healthy is most correctly used to signify possessing or enjoying health or its results; as, "a healthy person;" "a healthy condition." Healthful signifies promotive of health, tending or adapted to confer, preserve, or promote health; as, "a healthful climate." "Wholesome food in a healthful climate makes a healthy man." With healthful are ranged the words hygienic, salubrious, salutary, sanitary, and wholesome, while the words sound, strong, vigorous, are associated with healthy. Salubrious is always used in a physical sense and is chiefly applied to air or climate. Salutary is now chiefly used in the moral sense; as, "a salutary lesson."—Standard.

Heaps.

Heaps used in the sense of a great deal or a great many, or number, is always incorrect. Instead of saying: "I have had heaps of trouble;" "I have heaps of things to do," one should say: "I have had a great deal of trouble;" "I have a great many things to do." Heap is properly used in the sense of something accumulated; as, "a heap of rubbish."

Hear To It.

Instead of saying, "He would not hear to my going," say, "He would not consent to my going."

Help.

Instead of saying, "I have no help at present," say, "I have no maid" (or servant).

Help and Necessary.

Instead of saying, "I do not go there more than I can help," one preferably says, "I do not go there more than is necessary."

"No more than I can help" is a favorite colloquialism that defies analysis. Help being used in the sense of avoid or prevent requires a negative after the comparative with than, so that the phrase would regularly be "no more than I cannot help," which is harsh, and to many, ridiculous. It is better to avoid the expression, using, "no more than is necessary," or some similar phrase.—Standard.

Hence, Thence, Whence.

See From Hence, etc.

Herself, Himself.

Herself, himself, yourself, myself, etc., are properly used only in either a reflexive or an emphatic sense, as, "She hurt herself," "She herself said so," "She bought this for herself," herself referring back to the pronoun she. Likewise himself refers back to he; your- self to you, etc.; as, "He himself said so," "You have no one but yourself to blame." Constructions in which the "self pronouns" do not refer back to the person used, are incorrect; thus: "This is for yourself;" "With love to your mother and yourself, I am," etc., are incorrect.

Him and Me.

See Case of Pronouns.

Himself.

See Herself.

Him Going.

Instead of saying, "There is no use in him going," one properly says, "There is no use in his going," the possessive case being required before the gerund, or verbal noun. Likewise, one says: "There is no use in my (not me) going;" "There is no use in your (not you) going."

Hired Girl.

Instead of "hired girl," one properly says maid or servant.

Home.

Instead of saying, "He is home," one says in nice usage, "He is at home."

Hopes.

The plural form is incorrect in such sentences as, "I have no hopes of his recovery." One properly says: "I have no hope of his recovery;" "I have no hope of going."

How and What.

How? for "What did you say?" does not conform to the best usage of the language.

However.

However should not be used in interrogative sentences in the place of how or how followed by ever. Instead of "However could you do it?" one properly says, "How could you do it?" or "How could you ever do it?" However, as a conjunctive adverb is correct; as, "However wise one may be, there is a limit to one's knowledge."

I.

I and Me.

See Case of Pronouns.

I am Not Mistaken.

"I am not mistaken," is idiomatic for "I mistake not;" in consequence, such sentences as, "I think I saw him yesterday if I am not mistaken," are correct, the real meaning being, "I think I saw him yesterday if I mistake not." Reformers insist upon the latter construction as being the grammatical form, but the idiom is generally regarded as preferable.

I Don't Know as I Do.

See as I do.

I Should Have Liked to C.

See Concord of Infinitive with principal verb.

I Supposed It to Be Him.

See Case of Pronouns.

I Think I Shall.

Instead of saying, "I guess I will," one properly says, "I think I shall."

I Wish I (He, She, It) Were.

See Were after wish.

Ible and Able.

Fitzedward Hall rules as follows: "Generally, the termination is ible if the base is the essentially uncorrupted stem of a Latin infinitive or supine of any conjugation but the first. To this rule, however, there are many exceptions. To all verbs, then, from the Anglo-Saxon to all based on the uncorrupted infinitival stems of Latin verbs of the first conjugation, and to all substantives whencesoever sprung, we annex able only."

A knowledge of Latin is essential to an understanding of this subject. In the first conjugation, the termination abilis gives able; in the second, the third, and the fourth, the termination ibilis gives ible.

Ice-Cream and Ice-Water.

The forms ice-cream and ice-water have been so generally employed for iced-cream and iced-water, as to become almost, if not wholly, idiomatic. In consequence, they should not be censured.

If Ever.

See Seldom if ever.

If and Though.

If and though are interchangeably used in the phrase conjunctions as if and as though.

If and Whether.

Instead of saying, "I do not know if I can go," one properly says, "I do not know whether I can go." If introduces a suppositional or conditional clause; whether, an alternative; as, "I shall not go if it rains;" I do not know whether I can go." See Whether.

If I Were.

Were is used with the present infinitive or the present participle to express a future event about which there is uncertainty. It is properly used when should can be used in its stead; as: "If I were to go, I should pay half of the expenses." "If I were going, I should pay half of the expenses."

"If I were to go," or "If I were going," is equal to "If I should go," which is the form of the future tense of the subjunctive mode.

If It Was and If It Were.*

There is a strong tendency to restrict the use of the present tense of the subjunctive mode (If it be) to the literary employment of the language; but many writers, as well as speakers, prefer to use the indicative form (If it is) instead of the subjunctive; that is, in the present tense.

In the past tense of the subjunctive mode, were is required in all three persons. The following illustrative sentences show the uses of was and were:

Was.

If I was in the wrong (and I suppose I was), I ask your pardon.

If he was at home (and he was at home), why did you not see him?

If I were you (but I am not), I should go.

If this cup was cracked (and it was cracked), why did you buy it?

If the key of the piano was broken (and it was), why didn't you speak about it?

Were.

If I were in the wrong (and I am not), I should ask your pardon.

If he were at home (but he is not at home), I should ask him to see you.

If I were he (but I am not), I should write.

This cup looks as if it were cracked (not sure about it).

The piano sounds as if a key were broken (not sure about it).

(Observe that in the foregoing sentences, the past subjunctive form were expresses present time.)

Ill and Sick.

There exists a growing tendency to restrict the uses of ill and sick so as to require sick when the meaning is nauseated, and to use ill in all other instances, except when placed before a noun. Thus: "He is a sick man," but not "He is an ill man."

Illy.

Illy is always incorrect, ill being the form of both the adjective and the adverb; as, "He is ill" (adjective); "He behaved ill (adverb)."

Illusion.

See Delusion.

Immediately and Directly.

See Directly.

I'm Not.

See Contractions.

Immerge.

See Emerge.

Immigrant.

See Emigrant.

Imminence, Imminent.

See Eminent.

Immunity and Impunity.

Immunity from in (not) and munus (service), denotes freedom from any burden. Impunity, from in (not) and paena (punishment), denotes freedom from punishment; as: "No one seems to enjoy entire immunity from sickness or disease; "The impunity with which he committed the crimes is without parallel in history."

Imperative and Imperious.

Imperative means authoritative; obligatory; as, "The army received imperative orders to march." Imperious means domineering; overbearing; as, "She was high strung and imperious."

Implicate and Involve.

Implicate is used only of persons; involve, of both persons and things. Implicate means simply to enfold; involve, to roll into or entangle; hence, involve is the more expressive word. Thus, we say: "Several persons are implicated," meaning that suspicion has been directed against them; "Several are involved," meaning that the persons are entangled so deeply as to convert suspicion into belief of their guilt. While involve is the stronger word, unlike implicate, it does not always imply moral obliquity; thus: we say, "The nation is involved in war;" "The man is involved in debt;" "The problem is involved."

In and At.

See At and In. ("He lives in New York"; "He lives at Yonkers.")

In My Mind.

See Doubt in My Mind.

In and Into.

In, as a preposition, denotes inclusion; into, entrance; as, "He is in the house;" "Come into the house."

(When used as an adverb to indicate entrance, in may be used, but it is not followed by a noun. Thus, we may say, "Come in;" but, as indicated, not "Come in the house.")

In Town and to Town.

One properly says, "I am going to town," to indicating direction.

In a Street and On a Street.

One properly says, "lives on a street," not in a street." On denotes relative position; in, inclusion. The street includes the sidewalk and the road-bed; in consequence, one does not live in a street unless one is homeless and friendless. Compare with "He lives on the Hudson."

Century says: [On] used of relative position: in a position at; near, adjacent to; indicating situation or position without implying contact or support; as: "on Broadway;" "on the coast of Maine;" hence, very near to, etc.

The usage of the newspaper, modeled after that in England will tend, in time, to establish the general employment of "in the street" in this country.

In Front Of; Before.

In front of refers especially to the position or direction; as, "He stood in front of me." While in front of is frequently employed to mean in the presence of; as, "She said this in front of mother and me," in front of does not express the meaning so exactly as does the phrase in the presence of, or the preposition before.

In Future and In the Future.

The is required in the phrase, "In the future." Compare with "In the past," "In the present," the being required in each case.

In Our Midst.

Although occasionally censured as incorrect for "in the midst of us," "in our midst" has the sanction of some literary authority.

In So Far As.

In is superfluous. See As far as, So far as, etc.

In Spite Of.

As an adverbial phrase to express a stronger meaning than notwithstanding, "in spite of," although criticized by some writers, is correctly used.

In Time and On Time.

"On time" is correctly employed only as a railroad expression; as, "The train was on time." One properly says, "Try to be in time," or "to come in time."

In and Within.

While in is interchangeably used with within when the meaning is during; within the limit or duration of, within is preferable, for the reason that in has still another meaning, namely, at the expiration of. A nice discrimination restricts within to express within the limit of, and in to denote at the expiration of; as, "He will be here within an hour." "He will be here in an hour."

Inaugurate.

Although censured by some critics as incorrectly used in the sense of to initiate or to set in operation, inaugurate is recorded as properly used in the sense; as, "to inaugurate a great reform."

Incite and Excite.

See Excite.

Inclose and Enclose.

See En and In.

Inasmuch and Insomuch.

Inasmuch means to such a degree; in view of the fact, and is followed by as. Insomuch means to such a degree; to such use, and is followed by that.

Indexes and Indices.

Indexes and Indices are correct, but restrictive plurals of index, the first being used of a table of contents, the second as a scientific or mathematical term.

Indeed! Is That So?

These expressions are criticized as implying a question, and hence as being a kind of rudeness; but the censure is somewhat hypocritical. There is no especial objection to these forms if used sparingly and restricted to familiar conversation.

Indentation and Indention.

An Indentation is a notch in an edge or border; an indention is a space between the margin and the initial end of a paragraph.

Indict and Indite.

Indict means to present a formal or written charge of crime; indite means to put words into writing, but it has no legal significance.

Indorse and Endorse.

See En and In.

Indorse (Indorse) on the back.

“On the back” is superfluous in the wording, “Indorse the check on the back,” the phrase being implied in the word indorse, which means to write upon the back of.

Induction.

See Deduction.

Infectious and Contagious.

See Contagious.

Informed and Posted.

Informed, and not posted, is required in such sentences as, “He is well-informed on such matters.” Again, post should not be used in the sense of inform; as, “I wish you would post me before I go.”

Infinitive.

See Concord of Infinitive with Principal Verb.

Ingenious and Ingenuous.

Ingenious is used of a person who is clever or able; ingenuous is used of one who is free from guile; candid, or frank.

Innumerable.

Innumerable means without number, and in consequence, must not be used with the word number.

Inquire and Enquire.

See In and En.

Intend and Mean.

Intend and mean are recorded in our dictionaries as interchangeably used when the meaning is: to have in mind, view, or contemplation; also, to signify, to give to understand. Some critics, however, suggest that intend should be reserved to express the first meaning,—to have in mind, view, or contemplation, and mean, to express the second,—to signify, to give to understand; thus: “When do you intend (not mean) to go?” “What do you mean (not intend) by these remarks?” It is evident that in the second sentence, mean is the proper word, but when mere intention is to be expressed, it would be difficult to eliminate the employment of mean and to use only intend, for the reason that long and established usage has fixed the interchangeability of these words; thus: we hear as frequently, “I meant to write” as “I intended to write”; “I mean to call” as “I intend to call.” The use of intend in constructions like these, however, seems preferable.

Irritate and Aggravate.

See Aggravate.

Irruption.

See Eruption.

Is and Are.

See Concord of Subject and Verb: also Four and Five is or are.

Is Being Built.

See Being built.

Is Come and Has Come.

Bain gives the following: “We say, ‘has come’ as well as ‘is come.’ It would seem advantageous to utilize the two forms for different meanings. ‘Has come’ appears more suitable in the case of an active or personal subject; as, 'John has come;' the other, to a passive or inanimate subject; as, 'The box is come.' "

The foregoing also applies to other intransitives, such as "is gone" and "has gone."

Is Received and Has Been Received.

"Is received" denotes present time; "has been received," time up to the present; as, "Your letter is received" (just received); "Your letter has been received" (at any time up to the present).

Is That So.

"Is that so," "You don't say," "You know," "Don't you know," are not in accordance with the best usage of the language.

See Indeed.

Isn't Hardly.

See Double Negatives.

Isn't That.

See Double Negatives.

Ise and Ize.

Such words as "civilize," "criticize," "idealize," have a variant spelling of ise, the latter being suggested by those reformers who wish to establish a uniformity in spelling.

Its, It's, and 'Tis.

Its, written without an apostrophe, is the possessive form of it; as, "A pronoun agrees with its antecedent in number." It's, written with an apostrophe, is a colloquial contraction for it is; as, "It's better to wear out than to rust out." 'Tis, with the apostrophe preceding t, is chiefly restricted to poetic uses; as, 'Tis the glad Christmas tide."

J.

Jew, Hebrew, Israelite.

A Jew is a member of the Hebraic division of the Semitic race; in consequence Hebrew is the linguistic name of the Jews.

Standard gives the following:

"Under the theocracy, they were known as Hebrews; under the monarchy, as Israelites; and during foreign domination, as Jews. The modern representatives of this stock call themselves Hebrews in race and language, and Israelites in religion, but Jews in both senses."

Jewelry, Jewels.

Jewelry is a collective noun, and jewels is a plural noun. In nine usages the term jewelry designates the stock of a jeweler; jewels, the articles of adornment worn by a lady.

Join Issue and Take Issue.

In nice usage, "join issue" means to admit the right of the denial of a statement. "Take issue" means merely to deny.

Journal.

See Daily Journal.

Jump At.

"Jump at" is used in the sense of to embrace eagerly; as "He jumped at the offer." "Jump at" should also be used instead of "Jump to" in the sense of arriving at; as, "He jumped at the conclusion," meaning that he arrived at it hastily. "Jump to" is properly used when jumping from a high to a low place; as, "He jumped to the floor below."

K.

Kid.

In polite usage, kid is not properly employed to denote a young child.

Kind Of.

Kind of should not be used for somewhat. Instead of "I am kind of tired," one properly says, "I am somewhat tired."

Kind Of A.

A is superfluous in such constructions as, "What kind of man is he" (not "kind of a"). The same rule applies to sort.

Kind and Kinds.

See These kind and These sort.

Kindnesses.

The singular abstract noun kindness may be made into a plural common noun by the addition of es; as, "I wish to thank you for your many kindnesses." Many abstract nouns may be turned into common nouns in this way: for example, charity, charities; occupation, occupations; trial, trials; memory, memories; virtue, virtues; vice, vices; sorrow, sorrows; folly, follies; etc.

Kitty-Cornered.

Kitty-cornered, a corruption of cater-cornered, is itself Provincial English and also U. S. for diagonal or set diagonally. If used, however, kitty-cornered is the correct spelling.

Knights Templars.

The plural of Knight Templar is Knights Templars, each noun being made plural. See Plurals.

L.

Lady and Woman.

Standard gives the following:

"Lady, the feminine of lord, meaning, according to Max Müller, 'she who looks after the loaf,' the mistress, has always been a title of superiority, all ladies being women but not all women being ladies. In England, it is a title of rank; throughout the English-speaking world it signifies 'a refined or well-bred woman or one of superior social position,' and is used as a correlative of gentleman. Its use as indicating mere distinction of sex is a sheer vulgarity—not 'A man and a lady' but 'A man and a woman,' or 'A gentleman and a lady.' Not 'A man and his lady' but 'A man and his wife.' The entry in a hotel or steamship register, 'John Smith and lady,' may be a survival of older English usage; but except in such purely business registers, the proper form is 'John Smith and wife' or 'Mr. and Mrs. John Smith.' The good old-fashioned name woman best expresses the permanent and all-important relations of the female sex to the race and to the work of the world. The use of lady for woman, by those who wrongly suppose that the latter term is in some way derogatory, in cases where the distinction to be brought out is only one of sex, or of racial relations, and does not necessarily involve rank, character, or culture, is as objectionable as salesgentleman would be. Even in the drawing-room usage of the English aristocracy, where the word lady, in its use as a title, implies high rank or birth, woman is always preferred when at all permissible, and in literature, the indiscriminating use of lady is less common than formerly."

Last and Latest.

Last in one of its senses means latest; in consequence, one may say, "The last issue of the magazine," meaning the latest issue. Some speakers, however, prefer to use latest instead of last, as more closely expressing the meaning to be conveyed.

Last and Latter.

Notwithstanding that last is a superlative form, and so implies more than two in its reference, it is frequently used for only two persons or things, while latter, on the other hand, implying only two in its reference, is frequently used for more than two things. The tendency to restrict these words to their correct use is an effort in the right direction. The following extract from CORRECT ENGLISH is relevant: "While latter may be used of more than two things when it refers to that which is nearer to the close or to the present time, as, 'in these latter days,' it is applicable to two persons or things only when used in the sense of that which is in order of existence or of mention. In other words, latter is opposed to the word former."

Last Two and First Two.

These forms (not two last or two first) express the meaning to be conveyed when more than two persons or things are meant.

Learn and Teach.

To learn is to acquire knowledge; to teach is to convey it; as, "He has finally learned the lesson that I have been trying to teach him."

Leave and Let.

The uses of leave and let are many, but those which occasion confusion are the following:

Leave 1.

To give leave to.

Let 1.

To give leave to.

Leave 1 and let 1 are interchangeable in meaning, but they differ in their requirements as to the construction of the context. Thus: leave 1 is followed by an infinitive with its sign, the preposition to, expressed, while let 1 is followed by an infinitive with its sign, the preposition to, unexpressed; as, "I shall leave you to decide the matter;" "I shall let you decide the matter."

Such expressions as "Leave me go" and "Leave me be," for "Let me go," and "Let me be" are always incorrect; for, inasmuch as Leave 1 (meaning to give leave to) is followed by the infinitive with the preposition to, expressed, and as the preposition cannot be employed in such constructions as, "Leave me go," "Leave me be," while it can be omitted before the infinitive after let, let, and not leave is the required form.

Leave 2.

To keep back or withdrawn from or refrain from having to do with; as, "Leave me alone." (Meaning, do not annoy, touch, or molest me, etc.)

Let 2.

To keep back or withdraw from or refrain from having to do with; as, "Let me alone." (Meaning, do not annoy, touch, or molest me, etc.)

"Leave me alone," meaning, do not disturb, touch or molest me, must not be confused with the incorrect expression, "Leave me be." (See instructions given above.)

While leave and let when used with alone are interchangeable in the foregoing uses, there is a sense in which these words are not synonymous; thus: when the meaning is to depart from the presence of another, leave, and not, let, is required; as, "Leave me alone for a few minutes" (depart from my presence).

Left.

Such expressions as, "He left this morning," are in accordance with the everyday employment of the language. In strict usage, left takes a direct object; as, "He left the city this morning." Inasmuch as there is a growing tendency to use left absolutely, critics are less inclined than formerly to censure such constructions as, "He left this morning."

Lengthwise, Sidewise.

Lengthwise, sidewise, endwise, not lengthways, sideways, endways, are the correct forms.

Less and Fewer.

See Fewer.

Less and Least.

The comparative form less, not the superlative least, is required in comparing two persons or things; as, "Of two evils choose the less."

Less and Lesser.

The comparative form is properly less, not lesser; as, "Of two evils choose the less."

When used in the sense of minor or inferior, lesser is correct; as, "the lesser lights;" "the lesser prophets."

Let's You and Me.

After let, the objective form me is required; as, "Let's (let us) you and me go," not "Let's you and I go."

Liabie.

See Apt.

Libel and Slander.

Libel is written defamation; slander is spoken defamation.

Lie and Lay.

Lie means to rest; its principal parts are: Present lie; past lay; present participle lying; past participle lain. Lay means to cause to rest; its principal parts are: Present lay; past laid; present participle laying; past participle laid.

One properly says: "I am going to lie down;" "I was lying down when you called;" "I lay on the sofa last night;" "I had just lain down when you called;" "Lay the book down;" "He laid the book down;" "He was laying the book down as I came in;" "He had just laid the book down as I came in."

Such expressions as "lay-down collar" and "lay of the land" accord with the usage of the language.

Life and Lives.

The singular abstract noun life is used to express animate existence; the state or condition of being alive. The plural common noun lives is used to express corporeal existence; living beings; as: "Life is a mystery"; "Many lives were lost." Frequently, the common plural noun lives is employed even when life would more properly express the idea; as, "They are happy all their lives"; life, however, would be preferable in such cases.

Lighted and Lit.

"He lighted the gas" is preferable to "He lit the gas."

Lightening and Lightning.

Lightening means to relieve of a burden or weight; lightning is a sudden flash of light.

Like and As.

See As.

Like and Love.

One properly uses like to express a preference; as, "I like (not love) oranges."

Liked.

Such provincialisms as, "He liked to have fallen if I had not been there," or "He would liked," etc., are always incorrect. One properly says, "He would (or might) have fallen if I had not been there."

Likely.

See Apt.

Limited.

Limited is often faultily used for small, slight, and other words of like meaning; as, "He had a limited (slight) acquaintance with Milton"; "Sold at the limited (low or reduced) price of one dollar"; "His pecuniary means are likely to remain quite limited"—admissible if suggesting the reverse of unlimited wealth, otherwise, small or narrow.—Standard.

Line.

Line used in the sense of kind, or business, or again in other senses where specific words may be used to express the meaning, is not in accordance with the best employment of the language. Instead of saying, "In what line of business are you engaged" one properly says, "In what business are you engaged" or "What kind of work are you doing?" Again such expressions as, "He talked for several minutes along that line," should be avoided. One should use specific language, as, "He talked for several minutes on that subject," or "in connection with that subject."

Lines.

Reins, not lines, is correct. Instead of "Give me the lines," one properly says, "Give me the reins."

Little and a Little.

When preceded by a, little denotes some; when used alone or preceded by but, it means not much. (Compare with Few and A few.)

Livs or Liv.

Instead of saying, "I had as livs (or liv) go," one properly says, "I had as lief go," had as lief being the modern and idiomatic form of had liefer.

Live At.

See At.

Live On.

See In and On.

Loaned and Lent.

Lent and lend, not loaned and loan, are the correct forms. Loan is properly used only as a noun; thus, "I lent him (or I will lend him) the money"; "He asked me for a loan."

The expression "Money to loan" is correct, to loan being properly a noun (verbal) with the preposition for understood but not expressed.

Located and Settled.

Located used in the sense of settled is colloquial. Instead of saying, "He has located in New York," one properly says, "He has settled in New York."

Lonely and Solitary.

Lonely means desolate, forsaken, lacking in companionship or sympathy. Solitary means alone. A person may be alone, but not necessarily be lonely.

Look Badly.

"Look bad," not "look badly," is the required form, look being used in the sense of seem or appear, and hence, expressing inaction. See Adjective or Adverb.

Lots.

Lots in the sense of "a great deal" is incorrect. Instead of saying, "We have lots of time," one properly says, "We have a great deal of time."

Lovely.

Lovely is properly used only of that which is worthy of love; in consequence, it should not be used in such expressions as, "The dinner was lovely;" "I have a lovely gown."

Low-Priced.

Low-priced should not be used in the sense of cheap. An article is low-priced when but little money is asked or paid for it, and yet it may be dear. An article is cheap when the amount of money asked or paid for it is small compared with its true worth.

Luncheon and Lunch.

Luncheon is the preferred form of the noun, lunch being properly restricted to express action; "Luncheon is ready;" "They lunched on crackers and cheese."

Luxuriant and Luxurious.

Luxuriant signifies growth; luxurious, luxury; as, "Her hair is luxuriant;" "Her surroundings are luxurious."

M.

Mad.

Mad in the sense of angry, as "I am mad at him" for "I am angry with him," is not in accordance with the best usage of the language. One may say, however, in everyday usage, "He gets mad at trifles," this use of mad being less objectionable than when employed in connection with persons.

Madam and Miss.

In the salutation of a business letter, Madam is commonly employed for both married and unmarried women; but, inasmuch, as this form is recorded as being especially required when addressing married women, and elderly unmarried women, it would seem preferable to restrict the title to married women, and to omit the salutation when addressing unmarried women, except when the relations between the writer of the letter and the recipient are sufficiently cordial to admit of the salutation "Dear Miss Blank" or "My dear Miss Blank."

In an oral salutation to strangers, Madam must be used for both married and unmarried women, as Miss without the surname is always incorrect. The salutation "Dear Miss" without the name of the person thus addressed is always incorrect, whether oral or written.

Madame President; Madame Chairman.

Madame President and Madame Chairman are the required forms when addressing the president and the chairman of women's societies.

Majority.

The plural verb is used with majority in such constructions as: "The majority have decided to postpone the meeting." When used with the modifying adjective numerical, the singular verb is required.

Mail and Post.

One properly says either "I will mail the letter" or "I will post the letter."

Make An Experiment.

One properly says, "I will make an experiment," not "I will try an experiment," try being already implied in the word experiment.

Marine, Maritime, Naval, and Nautical.

Marine and maritime are from the Latin mare, meaning the sea, and signify belonging to the sea; naval is from the Latin navis, meaning a ship, and signifies belonging to a ship; nautical is from the Latin nauta, a sailor, and signifies belonging to a sailor, or to navigation.

Marry.

"She married a man named Brown," is incorrect, for the reason that a woman does not marry a man. A woman, when she weds, is married to a man, but the clergyman or magistrate marries her.

May and Can.

May expresses permission; can, denial; as, "May I go?" "Yes, you may;" "No; you can not." (See Can and May.)

When expressing ability can is generally employed, although may is sometimes used when can would be expected; as, "I will do this in order that you may go."

Century gives the following:

"May.—To have power; have ability; be able (in the sense of can). In the absolutely original use of can, it is now rare, being superseded by can except where a degree of contingency is involved, the notions of power, ability, permission, contingency, etc., passing into each other, and may in many constructions being purposely or inevitably used with more or less indefiniteness."

May and Might.

There is no essential difference between the uses of may and might, the words being employed according to the tense form required. Thus, the present tense form, "I may go if I can find some one to accompany me," becomes in the past tense, "I might go if I could find some one to accompany me;" "He says that I may go," becomes "He said that I might go."

(CORRECT ENGLISH: A COMPLETE GRAMMAR, pp. 190-193 contains a comprehensive exposition of May and Might in their various uses.)

Me.

See Case of Pronouns after the verb Be.

Mean.

Mean, in the sense of disobliging, unaccommodating, is not in accordance with the best usage of the language.

Means.

For singular and plural use, see Concord of Subject and Verb.

Meant To Write.

See Concord of Infinitive With the Principal Verb.

Merely, Simply.

Merely is used to indicate that no addition is to be made; simply implies the lack of complications; as "I asked him merely to show me the way" (not to take me); "It is simply impossible for me to go."

Messrs.

In this country, Messrs. is properly used only when it precedes firm names ending with "& Co.," Messrs. not being required when "&" is omitted; thus:

Peck & Hills Furniture Company,

Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:

Messrs. Lyon & Healy,

Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:

Meet your Approval.

One may say with equal propriety, "If this meets your approval" or "If this meets with your approval."

Middling.

Middling, used adverbially in such sentences as, "This is a middling good year for peaches," is not in accordance with the best usage of the language.

Midst.

See In our midst.

Mighty.

The use of mighty in the sense of very is in accordance with the every-day employment of the language, as, "I have had a mighty hard time." Many speakers prefer to use very, restricting mighty to express power, as, "He was a mighty man intellectually."

Mistaken.

See I am not mistaken.

Mitigate, Alleviate, Remove.

Mitigate and Alleviate, in the sense of make lighter, are interchangeably used, but alleviate is the stronger word, mitigate being the weakest of the three words, mitigate, alleviate, remove.

Standard gives the following (B to T, p. 144):

"Etymologically, to alleviate is to lift a burden toward oneself, and so lighten it for the bearer; to relieve is to lift it back from the bearer, nearly or quite away; to remove is to take it away altogether. Alleviate is thus less than relieve; relieve, ordinarily, less than remove. We alleviate, relieve or remove the trouble; we relieve, not alleviate, the sufferer. Assuage is by derivation, to sweeten; mitigate, to make mild; moderate, to bring within measure; abate, to beat down, and so make less. We abate a fever; lessen anxiety; moderate passions or desires; lighten burdens; mitigate or alleviate pain; reduce inflammation; soften, assuage, or moderate grief; we lighten or mitigate punishments; we relieve any suffering of body or mind that admits of help, comfort, or remedy. Alleviate has been often confused with ally."

Moments and Minutes.

A moment is not a minute. A moment is a space of time incalculably or indefinitely small; a minute is the sixtieth part of an hour. One may say either, "I will come in a few moments," or, "I will come in a few minutes," but in exact language the expressions are not identical in meaning.

Money.

The correct plural of money is moneys. The plural is sometimes written monies, but this variant spelling is not in conformity with the rule. Nouns that end in "y" preceded by a vowel, form the plural by adding "s;" nouns that end in "y" preceded by a consonant, form the plural by changing "y" to "i" and adding "es;" thus: money, moneys; lady, ladies.

Monetary.

See Financial, Monetary, Pecuniary.
More than I can help.

See Help.

More and Most.

More is properly used when comparing two persons or things; most when comparing more than two; as, "This is the more interesting book of the two;" "This is the most interesting of the three."

More strictly correct.

More is superfluous in the expression, "More strictly correct;" strictly is also superfluous, but may be occasionally used for emphasis.

More than probable.

"More than probable" is an emphatic phrase to denote that which is almost sure to happen. It is a stronger expression than probable, which indicates that which is likely to happen.

Mornings and Evenings.

One properly says: "I study in the morning," "I study in the evening," not "I study mornings," "I study evenings." See Evenings.

Most.

Most should never be used for almost. Instead of saying, "My work is most finished," one properly says, "My work is almost finished."

Most Perfect, Most Complete, Most Thorough.

These forms are gradually becoming adopted, even by good speakers and writers, instead of the expressions more nearly perfect; more nearly complete, etc.

Mrs. Dr. Blank.

The use of the husband's professional title is always objectionable, and should, under no circumstances be employed. The wife of Dr. J. Blank is Mrs. J. Blank.

Mutual Friend.

As the expression "common friend," suggested by some authorities, is objectionable because of the broad application of common, "mutual friend" should be restored to favor.

Common, however, is generally suggested as being the required form.

Myself.

The compound personal pronouns myself, yourself, herself, himself (never hiself or hisself) are correctly used only in a reflexive or an emphatic sense; as, "I hurt myself;" "He hurt himself (reflexive);" "I myself said so" or "I said so myself" (emphatic). Such expressions as, "This is for myself," "I send love to your mother and yourself" are always incorrect, for the reason that the compound personal pronoun is properly used reflexively, only when the object (direct or indirect) refers to the same person as the subject. The following are correct:

"I have only myself to thank" (reflexive).

"I bought this hat for myself" (reflexive,—the object is indirect.)

"I bought this hat myself" (emphatic).

"You yourself said so" (emphatic).

My Going.

Such expressions as, "There is no use of me going" (you, him, us, them going), are always incorrect, the possessive case being required before the verbal noun; as, "There is no use of my going" (your, his, our, their going").

N.

Name for and Name after.

We say, "The child was named for his uncle" or "The child was named after his uncle;" but for and after have somewhat variant meanings, for being used in the sense of "in honor of;" after, "in imitation of."

Near-by.

Near-by, used as an adjective, as "A near-by house," is not in accordance with the best usage of the language. Near by, used adverbially is correct; as, "A man that stood near by gave the signal."

Need and Needs; Dare and Dares.

Need, in the sense of that which is obligatory, is commonly and properly used in the third person singular without the terminal "s;" as: "He need not go;" "Need he go?" When used to express want, needs is always the required form; as, "He needs a new coat." Dare is also so used; as, "He dare not go," "Dare he go?"

The use of the preposition to after both need and dare is optional in many instances, but if employed, the terminal "s" is always required; as: "He needs to take warning," "He dares to go."

Need must and Needs must.

When used adverbially, needs, not need, is required; as, "He needs must go," not "He need must go."

Neither, Either, None, Any One.

As a conjunction used correlatively with nor and or, respectively, neither and either are properly used of more than two persons or things. When used as a pronoun or an adjective, neither and either are properly used only of two persons or things. When it is necessary to refer to more than two persons or things, none and any one are the required forms; thus: (conjunction) "Neither John, James, nor Henry is going;" "Either John,

James, or Henry is going;" (Pronoun) "Neither of the boys is going;" "Either of the boys can go." (Adjective) "Neither boy (or Neither one of the boys) is going;" "Either boy (or Either one of the boys) can go;" (Reference to more than two) "None of the boys are going;" "Any one of the boys will go."

In connection with the use of any, note the following:

Any may be used with either a singular or a plural noun. When used with a singular noun, it generally implies quantity; with a plural noun, number; as, "Is there any sugar?" Are there any apples?"

Neither nor; Either or.

Neither is properly followed by nor; either, by or. For singular and plural use, see Concord of subject and verb.

Neither . . . nor; Either . . . or.

Correlatives must precede the same parts of speech; as, "He will see neither him nor me," not "He will neither see," etc.; "He will see either him or me," not "He will either see," etc.

Never so.

See Ever so.

Never Remember.

Instead of "I never remember," one properly says, "I do not remember ever," as, for example, "I do not remember ever to have seen him."

New Beginner.

New is superfluous in the expression, "A new beginner."

Nice.

Although the use of nice in the sense of that which is pleasing and agreeable is commonly censured, there is a growing tendency even among good speakers so to use this word, as it is sometimes difficult to find a suitable synonym. In exact usage, nice means carefully chosen; characterised by accuracy; as, "A nice discrimination in the use of words."

Nicely.

Nicely in the sense of well or very well; as, "He is doing nicely," is incorrect.

No . . . but.

No should not be used as a correlative to but, not being the required word; thus: instead of "No criticism was made on account of the delay but on account of his indifference in the matter," one properly says, "Criticism was made, not on account of," etc.

Noblesse oblige.

Noblesse oblige (pronounced No-bles oblezh; o as in no; e in bles like e in end; e in blezh like e in eel, accent on the second syllable) means literally, "nobility obliges;" that is, noble birth imposes the obligation to act nobly.

Nobody else's.

"Nobody else's," not "Nobody's else."
See Anybody else's.

Nobody else than.

See Else and But.

No doubt but that.

Instead of "I have no doubt but that he will come," one properly says, "I have no doubt that he will come," but being superfluous.

No good.

Such expressions as, "This is no good;" "He is no good" are incorrect. One properly says: "This is worthless;" "He is of no account."

No other and None other.

No other, not none other, is the correct form: as, "It was no other than he," not "It was none other than he."

(Note that than, not but, is required after other and else, but being used in the absence of these words.) See Else and But.

No use.

No use must be preceded by of in sentences introduced by it; as, "It is of no use for you to go." When preceded by there, of is omitted, as "There is no use in your going."

Nowhere near.

Nowhere near in the sense of not nearly is incorrect. Instead of "He is not worth nowhere near as much as we think," one properly says, "He is not worth nearly so much," etc.

None.

None is construed as singular or plural according to the context. Thus, "None of the mail has been delivered;" "None of the letters have been delivered." "Is there any mail?" "There is none;" "Are there any letters?" "There are none."

NOTE.—No one is required when referring to an individual; as, "No one called during the day." When referring to several, none is frequently used; as, "Several called, but none remained."

Nor or Or. See Or.

Not.

For use of negative after not, see Or or Nor.

Not . . . but; Not merely . . . but.

The correlatives not . . . but and not merely . . . but, must precede the parts of speech; thus: "It is my aim, not to criticize, but to assist you;" not "It is not my aim," etc.; "This is intended, not merely to interest people, but to instruct them;" not "This is not merely intended," etc.

Noted and Notorious.

A nice usage of noted and notorious restricts the former to mean that which is favorably brought into prominence; the latter to mean that which is unfavorably made prominent.

Not all.

Instead of "All is not lost," one properly says, "Not all is lost."

Not at all.

"Not at all" is the correct response to "I am much obliged," the obligation being thus dismissed. "You are welcome" is properly used in acknowledging an expression of thanks.

Not only But also.

Correlatives must precede the same part of speech; as, "He visited not only New York but also Boston," not "He not only visited," etc.

Not so.

One properly says "He is not so tall as I" not "He is not as tall as I," so, and not as, being required after a negative.

NOUNS.

For singular, plural, and collective nouns, see Concord of Subject and Verb.

Nothing like.

Nothing like is incorrectly used in the sense of not nearly. Instead of "She is nothing like so good a singer as her sister," say "She is not nearly so good," etc. Nothing like is properly used in such constructions as, "There is nothing like being good."

Nominative Case.

See Case of Pronouns after the verb "Be."

Number of nouns and verbs.

For use of singular and plural number in special constructions, see Concord of Subject and Verb.

Number.

For singular and plural use of the word number, see Concord of Subject and Verb.

O.O and Oh.

O is used in direct address; as, "O Mary! How delightful!" Oh is used to express emotion; as, "Oh! Why did you do it?"

Observe the following rules in regard to the punctuation of O and Oh:

O is not immediately followed by an exclamation point, but oh, is so followed except where the emotion runs through the whole expression; in which case, oh is followed by a comma, and the entire emotional expression, by an exclamation point.

O home, magical, all powerful home!

O Absalom! O God! O my child!

Oh, how glad I am!

Oh! Where did you find it?

O is capitalized only when it begins a sentence; as, "Oh! You have found my knife; but oh, you have cut your hand with it!"

When a sentence is both exclamatory and interrogative, that point should be used which is demanded by the construction. Thus, if the construction partakes more especially of the nature of an exclamation, the exclamation point should be used; as, "Oh, where can rest be found!"

If, however, the sentence requires an answer, the exclamation point can be placed immediately after the interjection, and the interrogation point can be placed at the close of the sentence; as, "Oh! where has he gone?"

O. K.

The origin of "O. K." is obscure, but it is said to have originated with Andrew Jackson, who used it as an abbreviation of "All Korrekt."

Usage varies in the writing of the past and participle forms of O. K. Thus, O. K.d or O. K'd.; O. K.ing; or O. K'ing. Of course, grammatically considered, there is really no past or perfect tense form of O. K. except as usage has established it. As to whether O. Kd. and O. King could be regarded as correct, there is no like abbreviation upon which one may base a decision. It would seem that either O.K.d or O.K'd.; O.K.ing or O.K'ing would be correct abbreviations.

Objective case after the verb "Be."

See Case after the verb "Be."

Observance and Observation.

A nice use of observance and observation restricts the former to indicate that which is held sacred; the latter, that which is carefully noted; as, "His strict observance of the Sabbath day was such as to excite comment;" "This fact had not come under my observation."

Occupancy and Occupation.

Occupancy means to take possession. Occupation implies the right to occupancy. It has still another meaning, namely, that of employment.

Of age.

One properly says: "He was a child of three years," "The child was three years of age," or "The child was three years old," but not "He was a child of three years old."

Of any.

See All and Any.

Of the name of.

See By the name of.

Of the time.

As applied to time, of is the required preposition.

Century gives the following:

Of.—Measuring time; noting relative position in space or time.

Under to, Century says that to is found in various obsolete, provincial, and colloquial uses instead of the correct preposition after, against, . . . of, etc.; as, "At twenty minutes to three, Her Majesty . . . entered the House."

Of Which and Whose.

Although whose, used of inanimate things, has been censured by some critics, it has become established as correct. Standard gives the following:

"The use of whose, the possessive of who, in place of the phrase of which, is now considered good style; thus: instead of 'Poetry, the chief purpose of which is to exalt the beautiful,' we can correctly say, 'Poetry, whose chief purpose,' " etc.

Off of.

Of is superfluous after off. Instead of "Cut a slice off of the bread," one properly says, "Cut a slice off the bread."

Official and Officer.

An official is defined as one holding a public office; an officer, as one holding office by election, especially under the government; thus, we speak of a railroad official and a police officer.

Older and Oldest.

See Elder and Eldest.

On.

On should not be omitted in such constructions as, "He called on Monday."

On a street.

See In a street.

On and Upon.

See Call on.

Onto and on to.

Onto and on to have both been criticised by purists, onto being characterized as a vulgarism and on to as containing a superfluous word (to).

Onto (analogous in form to into and unto) and on to are suggested by some authorities as having the right to some consideration where to is not utterly superfluous, as when motion is indicated as coming from above, the example, "The boy fell on the roof" being given as expressing a different meaning from "The boy fell on to or onto the roof." It may be difficult to establish onto because of the severe criticism to which it has been subjected; but there seems no legitimate reason why on to should not be used in cases where to can be shown not to be redundant.

One.

After one, one or one's, as the case may require, is preferably used to he or his; as, "When one has decided upon one's career, one," etc. In the case of extended statements, where the excessive repetition of one would sound pedantic, an antecedent noun, like person, student, and the like, may be used. The noun is then properly followed by he or his. The compound pronouns any one, some one, etc., are followed by he or his, as the construction may require.

In this connection, note that the plural reference is always incorrect; thus: instead of "Every one knows their own affairs best," one properly says, "Every one knows his," etc.

See Any one.

Note, too, that the pronoun you should not be substituted for one, as its use is confusing. For example, the wording, "When you have made an error, you dislike to be told of it," does not express the meaning conveyed as does the impersonal pronoun one. In literature, where a conversational style is employed, and where the meaning cannot be mistaken, the pronoun you is sometimes employed to advantage.

One of those which have or has.

See Antecedent of Relative Pronoun.

One another and each other.

See Each other.

One or two is or are going.

“One or two are going,” is the correct form, this being in accordance with the rule: When the conjunction or or nor connects two nouns of which one is singular and the other plural, the plural verb is required and the plural noun must immediately precede it.

See Concord of Subject and Verb.

Only.

Only should generally precede the word, phrase, or clause, that it modifies; as, “I saw him only for a few moments;” “I only saw him” means “I saw him; but did not speak to him.” When no ambiguity can arise, only may sometimes follow the word that it modifies as in the sentence, “I shall call attention to this matter only.”

Or or Nor after a negative.

Nor is always required after neither, but not always after other negatives. The following rule applies to the correct uses of these words:

Rule.—When the additional expression merely amplifies the subject, or is correctly used. When it is an important alternative, nor is required, thus:

He has no money nor credit. (Credit is used as an important alternative; an additional resource.)

He has no money or credit. (Credit is regarded as an equivalent of money, and serves merely to amplify the expression.)

In the following sentences, the expression introduced by or serves merely to amplify the expression:

He has no will or disposition to assist her.

He has no friend or acquaintance in the city.

He has not a friend or acquaintance in the city (second word is regarded as, in a sense, a synonym of the first).

There is no coal or wood in the house.

In the following sentences, the expression introduced by nor is used as an important alternative:

He has no will nor disposition to assist her.

He has no friend nor acquaintance in the city.

He has not a friend nor an acquaintance in the city (second word is regarded as an important alternative).

There is no coal nor wood in the house.

While the use of or or nor after no seems to admit of much laxity, there should not be much difficulty in discriminating between the uses of or and nor after not, for the reason that when the additional expression is regarded as a synonym of the first, the article should not be repeated. Thus, one would say, "He has not the will or disposition to assist her," but, "He has not the will nor the disposition to assist her."

Note also in this connection, that when in the place of no, neither can be substituted, it is always safe to use nor. Thus, in the sentence, "There is no coal or wood in the house," meaning there is no fuel of any kind, that is, there is neither coal nor wood, then it is safe to use nor. If on the other hand it is not the intention of the speaker to emphasize the idea that there is no fuel of any kind, then it is safe to use the form, "There is no coal or wood."

Oral and Verbal.

Oral pertains to that which is spoken, not written; verbal, to that which is conveyed by written or printed words.

Ordinance and Ordnance.

An ordinance is a regulation ordained by authority; as, "A municipal ordinance." Ordnance is artillery; cannon or large guns, thought of collectively.

Other than.

See But and Else.

Other.

Other is required after comparatives, as, "New York is larger than any other city in the United States."

See All and Any.

Other Alternative.

Instead of "There is no other alternative," one properly says, "There is no alternative." other being superfluous.

Ought and Should.

Ought is nicely used to express moral obligation; should, to express propriety; as, "You ought to obey your parents;" "You should dress more becomingly." In connection with the use of these words, note that ought is always followed by to, and that should is not so followed.

Ought used with had or hadn't, as “You hadn't ought to go,” is very objectionable.

Our mind or our minds.

See Mind.

Ourselves.

See Myself.

Outside of.

When used as a preposition, of is omitted after outside; thus, we say, “He went outside the house,” corresponding with the wording, “He went inside the house.” When used as a noun, of is required; as, “The blinds are on the outside of the house.”

Over and More Than.

Instead of “He has written over fifty letters,” “He has written more than fifty letters,” is suggested by some authorities as preferable; others do not make this distinction.

Over and Above.

Century gives the following: “Over, Above. Above expresses greater elevation, but not necessarily in or near a perpendicular direction; over expresses perpendicularity or something near it: thus, one cloud may be above another, without being over it. Over often implies motion or extension where above would not; hence the difference in sense of the flying of a bird over or above a house, the hanging of a branch over or above a wall. In such uses over seems to represent greater nearness.”

Over and Across.

Although censured by some critics, over is recorded as properly used in the sense of across, meaning to pass from side to side of or over the surface of; as, "To sail over the river." Some authorities favor across in such uses as, "He went across the bridge."

Over with.

With is superfluous in the sentence, "The trouble was over with when I arrived."

Overly.

The use of overly in the sense of very or over is not in accordance with the best usage of the language. Instead of saying, "I am not overly anxious about him," one properly says, "I am not very (or over-anxious) about him."

Own up.

Own up in the sense of to confess is censured by some critics, but the expression may be used in every-day speech.

P.

Pains.

For singular and plural use, see Concord of Subject and Verb.

Pair.

For singular and plural use, see Concord of Subject and Verb.

Pair of New Glasses or New Pair of Glasses.

While constructions like "a new pair of glasses" or "a new pair of gloves" are criticised by some authorities, the connection in thought is so close that the wording should hardly be censured.

Parenthesis.

Parenthesis applies to one set of brackets (one at the beginning of the included matter and one at the close). Parentheses is the plural of parenthesis and applies to two or more sets. "Place this in parenthesis," is the correct wording to indicate that the matter is to be included in one set of brackets.

Party.

Party should not be used in the sense of person. Instead of saying, "I know a party who will lend you the money," one properly says, "I know a person who will lend you the money."

Party is properly used as a legal term or to indicate a number of persons; as, for example, in the wording, "The party of the first part"; "Our party will sail next week."

Pardon me and Excuse me.

See Excuse me.

Part and Portion.

While portion is often used in the sense of part, it is better to restrict part to mean a section or a division, and portion to mean an allotment; as, "A part of the orange is bad"; "He gave an equal portion of the orange to each child."

For the use of the singular and the plural verb with part, see Concord of Subject and Verb.

PAST AND PERFECT TENSES.

See Tenses.

Past and Last.

Past and last, meaning belonging to a time gone by, are interchangeably used; as, "the past few months;" "the last few months."

Passed and Spent.

Passed and spent are interchangeably used in such sentences as, "I have passed (or spent) a most delightful summer."

People and Persons.

The use of people is incorrect in speaking of a small number of persons. People is used primarily of a body of persons who compose a community, tribe, or nation; as, "The people of the United States;" "The people of Israel." While it may be also used of persons, as, "The young people of the church," "the room was full of people," it should not be used of a very small number: thus: instead of saying, "There were only a few people present," one properly says, "There were only a few persons present."

Per cent.

Per cent. is singular or plural according to the context; as, "Twenty per cent. is a high commission;" "Twenty per cent. of the immigrants were Germans." Per cent., being an abbreviation of per centum, is followed by a period.

Perfect.

See Most perfect; also Full.

Permit.

See Allow.

Perspicacity and Perspicuity.

Perspicacity means acuteness, penetration; perspicuity means clearness of expression, lucidity as applied to speech or writing.

Persuade and Convince.

To persuade a person is to lead him to an opinion; to convince him is to make him believe by force of argument.

Pertaining and Appertaining.

Pertaining and appertaining are interchangeable in meaning.

Per Year; Per- Secretary.

Per is a Latin preposition, and is properly joined only with Latin words; as, per annum, per diem, not per year, or per day. The forms per invoice, per letter, however, have the sanction of commercial employment. Instead of saying, "The magazine is one dollar per year, or ten cents per copy," one properly says, "The magazine is one dollar a year, or ten cents a copy." Again, instead of the signature "Per Secretary," one properly writes "By Secretary."

Pleasure and Happiness.

As applied to feeling, pleasure is distinguished from happiness, in that pleasure is a sensation of gratification resulting from an act; happiness is a general state or condition that one is in as a result of one's adaptation of circumstances to desire. According to one writer's exposition of what constitutes happiness, it consists in an excess of pleasure over pain.

PERSONAL PRONOUNS, POSITION OF.*

When two or more personal pronouns in the singular number are connected by "and," the second person precedes the first and the third, and the third person precedes the first; when the pronouns are used together in the plural number, the first person precedes the second and the third, and the second person precedes the third.

(b) In the conclusion of social letters, the same rules should be observed; thus:

INCORRECT.

Hoping to have the pleasure of seeing your sister and you on Monday, I am, etc.

NOTE.—In the case of personal pronouns connected by or or nor, some grammarians regard these pronouns as interchangeable in position; others, as being governed by special rules; but no distinction need be made in the case of pronouns connected by “or” from that of pronouns connected by “and.” (For construction of the verb following a compound subject connected by or or nor, see Concord of Subject and Verb.)

PLURAL NOUNS.*

Proper nouns form their plurals in the regular way, namely, by adding "s" and "es" to the singular.

SINGULAR.	(' ' s ' ') PLURAL.
George	The Georges
Mary	The two Marys
Palmer	The Palmers
Butler	The Butlers

SINGULAR.	(" es ") PLURAL.
Charles	The Charleses
Jones	The Joneses
Bellows	The Bellowses.
Griggs	The Griggsses.

The following specific rules govern the formation of the plural of some proper nouns :

(a) When a proper noun is preceded by a title, the plural termination may be added either to the title or to both the title and the noun.

SINGULAR.

Miss Brown.

PLURAL.

The Misses Brown or The Miss Browns.

Although one may refer to the Miss Browns in conversation, one should address them in a letter as "Misses Brown."

(b) When a numeral precedes the title, only the name is made plural :

* CORRECT ENGLISH : A COMPLETE GRAMMAR.

The two Miss Browns; The two Mrs. Browns;
The two Dr. Smiths.

(c) When the Christian name is given, the following forms are used:

The Misses Jane and Mary Brown, or Miss Jane and Miss Mary Brown.

In the case of two or more young ladies who are members of the same family, the eldest daughter is called "Miss Brown," while the other daughters are referred to as "Miss Mary" or "Miss Jane," as the case may require.

(d) When the title refers to several names, frequently only the title is made plural:

Those present were: Mesdames Jones, Brown, Wilkins, and Grey; Messrs. Black, White, and Grey; Drs. Adams, Smith, and Anderson.

Point of View, Viewpoint, and Standpoint.

Point of view is regarded as preferable to viewpoint by some authorities. As to standpoint, Standard gives the following:

"Standpoint. Irregularly formed—probably in imitation of the German *standpunk*i—and sometimes inconsiderately censured as being a superfluous substitute for point of view. That standpoint and point of view are not always interchangeable will be evident when the fact is recalled that in literary usage, point of view has two different senses: (1) The point from which one views; (2) the point or relative place at which something is viewed, giving rise to the two phrases, 'From this point of view' and 'In this point of view.' Furthermore, there is in standpoint, as commonly employed, an implication of some permanence of position, as regards the view taken or the opinion held; it is especially applicable to principle, convictions. etc., as determining views. No such implication of permanence attaches to point of view. Lincoln and Douglas argued, in their celebrated debate, from different standpoints; at times each, for the purposes of argument, took the other's point of view. Standpoint, therefore, besides being convenient as a single word, conveys a suggestion not carried by point of view, and, though it is less regular in formation than standingpoint, its irregularity is not wholly anomalous.

Politics.

Politics is properly followed by a singular verb.

P. M. and p. m.

See A. M.

POSSESSIVE CASE.*

The possessive case of a noun is that form of a noun by which the relation of ownership is expressed.

General Rule. The possessive case of both singular and plural nouns is formed by adding to the noun the apostrophe (') and the letter "s."

Ex.—Singular 1. Boy's hat. 2. Girl's dress. 3. Child's gloves. Plural 1. Women's gloves. 2. Men's coats. 3. Children's dresses.

(a) When either the singular or the plural noun ends in "s," possession is indicated by adding the apostrophe, as: "Burns' Poems;" "Charles' Reign;" "ladies' suits;" "The Rug-gleses' Christmas Dinner."

Note.—In the case of singular nouns, it is also correct to add the apostrophe and the letter s; thus, we may write either Burns' Poems, or Burns's Poems. If, however, s is added with the apostrophe, then the resulting sound of es is pronounced.

* CORRECT ENGLISH: A COMPLETE GRAMMAR, p. 36.

(c) When the resulting sound is not euphonious, only the apostrophe should be used; as, "for conscience' sake;" "for Jesus' sake." In connection with the use of the letter "s" as well as that of the apostrophe, note that if "s" is not used, the word is pronounced without the additional sound of "es;" thus, "Burns'" would be pronounced as it is spelled, while "Burns's" would be pronounced "Burnses."

(d) When two or more nouns are used so that joint possession is indicated, the sign of the possessive is added to the last word only; thus, "A. C. McClurg & Co.'s Book Store;" "Marshall Field & Co.'s Dry Goods Store."

Note.—We say correctly, "William, Mary, and John's uncle," but not "William's, Mary's, and John's uncle."

(e) When possession is not common to both nouns, the possessive sign must be used with each noun; thus, we say correctly, "Keats' and Shelley's poems."

Note the following constructions:

"John and Mary's bicycle" (one bicycle owned jointly by John and Mary). "John's and Mary's bicycle" (one bicycle owned by John, and one by Mary). "John and Mary's bicycles" (two or more bicycles owned jointly by John and Mary). "John's and Mary's bicycles" (two or more bicycles owned by John, and two or more bicycles owned by Mary).

(f) In the case of compound nouns, the sign of the possessive is added to the last word only; thus, "An heir-at-law's rights," "My father-in-law's sister."

(g) In the case of nouns in apposition, possession may be indicated in various ways; thus, it is correct to say, "I bought the book at Thompson the bookseller's," or "I bought the book at Thompson's, the bookseller," or "I bought the book at Thompson's, the bookseller's."

Note.—If the first noun does not indicate possession, the comma is omitted before the appositive word; thus, in the first sentence, the comma is omitted before the appositive word "booksellers," for the reason that the nouns are regarded for the time being as the equivalent of singular nouns.

Authorities differ as to the correctness of these forms; some giving precedence to the first and the third, others to the second and the third.

In such constructions as "My sister Mary's servant;" "My Uncle John's horse;" "My brother Will's carriage," possession is indicated only by the appositive noun, for the reason that the two nouns are regarded as a single noun.

In the case of pronouns, the rule governing joint possession does not apply; thus, instead of "You and Black's contract," one properly says, "Your and Black's contract."

Another variation from the established rule is seen in the wording whose else; in the wording any one else's, some one else's, etc., possession is indicated by the second word.

The following sentences illustrate the foregoing rules:

POSSESSIVE PROPER NOUNS.

Mrs. Shaw's home is in Toronto.

The Lyttons' house is for rent.

The Palmers' car is at the door.

The Bishops' house has been sold.

The Cummingses' reception was a delightful one.

The Burgesses' house is for rent.

The Knoxes' lot adjoins ours.

I bought the books at A. C. McClurg & Co.'s bookstore.

I bought the music at Lyon & Healy's.

I have been at my brother Dr. John Blank's sanatorium.

My sister Julia's children are ill.

My brother Frank's house has been sold.

King George's and Queen Victoria's reign were notable ones.

POSSESSIVE COMMON NOUNS.

The boy's coat is torn.

The boys' coats are torn.

The baby's rattle is lost.

The babies' rattles are lost.

A two weeks' vacation is all that I ask.

I wish two months' time on this note.

I will give it a three months' trial.

He took a two years' lease of the house.

POSSESSIVE CASE BEFORE THE GERUND

See "My going."

Possessives.

This is a photograph of my uncle.

She is a servant of my aunt's.

See Double Possessives.

Post or Mail.

Post and mail are interchangeably used in the wording, "Post (or mail) a letter."

Posted.

Although posted is frequently used in colloquial speech, in the sense of informed, it is an undesirable form of expression. Instead of saying, "He is very well posted on such matters," one properly says, "He is very well informed," etc.

Practical and Practicable.

1. PRACTICABLE AND PRACTICAL.—Practicable means feasible; practical means capable of being put into practice; as, "The plan is not practicable;" "He has no practical knowledge of any kind."

Century gives the following:

"Practical.—1. Of a thing: used of that which is dictated by or in harmony with the lessons of experience; capable of being used or turned to account; as, practical skill; practical knowledge.

2. Of a person: used of one who shows worldly wisdom, or knowledge gained by experience; as, a practical housekeeper; a practical gardener.

Practicable.—1. Of a thing: used of that which may be accomplished without expense or sacrifice greater than is advisable; as, a practicable scheme or plan.

2. Of a person: used of one who is easily managed; one who is of service; as, a practicable person to manage affairs.

EXAMPLES.

Practical: opposed to theoretical, speculative or ideal.

‘His practical knowledge of the business enabled him to discharge all his duties to the entire satisfaction of his employer.’

‘His practical judgment enabled him to determine what to do under the circumstances.’

‘They engaged a practical manager who took entire charge of the affair.’

‘These garments are not practicable for this time of the year.’

‘He was not a practicable person for the situation.’ ”

Precise and Exact.

Precise and exact, in the sense of conforming to a standard sharply and clearly determined, are largely interchangeable in meaning. We speak of a precise or an exact statement; but precise, not exact, manners; precise, in the latter sense, meaning scrupulously observant of rules.

PREPOSITION, REPETITION OF.

Rule.—The preposition should be repeated after an intervening conjunction, unless the word that follows the conjunction merely amplifies the thought expressed by the word that precedes the conjunction.

The repetition of the preposition is especially required if the intervening conjunction is preceded and followed by a verb in the infinitive mode and its object.

In the following sentences, the repetition of the preposition is required:

This was the cause of his failure in business and of the estrangement of his friends.

It was his custom to go to town in the morning, and to return in the evening.

In the following sentences, the repetition of the preposition is not required:

He likes to run and play.
He is learning to read and write.

INCORRECT.

He is unable either to do the work himself or get others to do it for him.

I am delighted to find her unchanged, and learn that she has still the same friendly feelings as before.

We are apt to overlook a person's good qualities and remember only his faults.

He hopes to master the subject of Grammar in a few months, and then take a course in Rhetoric.

CORRECT.

He is unable either to do the work himself or to get others to do it for him.

I am delighted to find her unchanged, and to learn that she has still the same friendly feelings as before.

We are apt to overlook a person's good qualities and to remember only his faults.

He hopes to master the subject of Grammar in a few months, and then to take a course in Rhetoric.

Further examples of constructions that do not require the repetition of the preposition:

This is for your father and mother.

He wrote to his brother and sister to come.

Love to you and all the other members of your family.

Note, however, that, for the sake of emphasis, the repetition of the preposition would be correct. Thus:

"This is both for your father and for your mother."

“He wrote to his brother and to his sister as well.”

Constructions like the following always require the repetition of the preposition:

INCORRECT.

Russia was ruled by the dissolute Elizabeth and Catherine the Great.

CORRECT.

Russia was ruled by the dissolute Elizabeth and by Catherine the Great.

Prepositional Phrase With Singular Subject.

See Concord of Subject and Verb.

Preposition at the end of a sentence.

Some critics censure the use of the preposition at the close of the sentence, but occasionally it is desirable; as, for example, in every-day speech, and again in such constructions as, “This is the end that he aimed at.” “This is the end at which he aimed,” would be preferred in very dignified writing or where the construction would sound weak, if closed with a preposition. To, however, must never close a sentence when used as a part of the infinitive; thus, instead of saying, “I do not go there so often as I used to,” the infinitive (go) is required to complete the wording. Again, when the object of the preposition is a pronoun, the preposition often closes the sentence; as, “What are you talking about?” “What are you looking for?” “Whom is your letter from?” “Whom is this parcel for?” While in dignified utterance, the preposition precedes the pronoun, it is common, even with good speakers, for the preposition to follow the pronoun in ordinary conversation.

Present and Introduce.

To present a person is to bring him or her into the presence of a superior; to make him or her known to a superior, or to one who takes precedence over another. To introduce is to make equals known to each other.

Pretty.

Pretty may be used to express a degree less than very; as, "I am pretty sure that he will come." This use of pretty is regarded by some as not being an elegant term; but as it conveys a meaning that can hardly be expressed by any other word, it should not be censured. It should, however, not be used when another word would express the meaning more definitely.

Pretty Near and Pretty Nearly.

Near is required when the meaning is nigh; nearly, when the meaning is within a little, almost; as, "I live pretty (very) near here;" "I have pretty (very) nearly finished my letter."

Note that in the foregoing, very is the better word.

Prevention and Preventative.

Preventative is an irregular and improper form of preventive; the latter is interchangeable with prevention when used in the sense of a precautionary measure.

Previous and Previously.

One properly says, "I saw him previously to my going," and not "I saw him previous to my going." The adverb, and not the adjective, is required, for the reason that reference is made to the action of the verb, and not to the condition of the subject.

"I saw him before going," as the simpler construction, is preferred by many.

Propose.

Instead of saying, "I don't propose to be imposed on," one properly says, "I don't intend to be imposed on," propose being incorrectly used in the sense of intend. One may propose a bill to a legislative body, propose as in an offer of marriage, or propose one as a member of a club.

Proved and Proven.

Proved, not proven, is the correct wording except in the Scottish verdict "not proven." Instead of saying, "This can be easily proven;" "They have proven him guilty," one properly says, "This can be easily proved;" "They have proved him guilty."

Century gives the following: "Prove: pret. proved; pp., proved,—sometimes incorrectly proven, ppr., proving. Again: proven, pp. an improper form, lately growing in frequency by imitation of the Scotch use in 'Not proven.'

Not proven.—In Scots law a verdict rendered by a jury in a criminal case where the evidence is insufficient to justify a conviction, yet strong enough to warrant a grave suspicion of guilt." In other words, proved, and not proven, conforms to the literary and the conversational employment of the language.

Providing and Provided.

Providing is incorrectly used in such constructions as, "I shall go East providing I can leave home," provided or provided that being required. Provided is correctly used as a participle; as, "He has been a dutiful son, providing in every way for the comfort of his parents.

Q.

Quantity, Number.

Quantity is used of that which can be measured; number, of that which can be counted; as, "There is a large quantity of sugar on hand;" "There are a large number of eggs in the basket." (In connection with the use of the singular or the plural verb with the word number, note that the plural verb is used when number means several; the singular, when number is used to stand for a unit; as, "A number of persons are going" (several); "The number is limited to five."

Quit.

"Quit that," meaning "cease that" is not a good use of quit. Quit, used in the sense of withdrawing from, as "to quit business," is correctly used.

Quite a Little.

Quite means wholly; as, "quite exhausted;" but quite a little is a meaningless expression.

R.

Raise and Raze.

To raise is to elevate; to raze is to level with the ground.

Raise and Rise.

See Rise.

Raised.

One properly says, "I was brought up (or reared) in the East," not "I was raised in the East." Cattle are raised, but it is not good form to speak of raising human beings.

Rarebit and Rabbit.

The dictionaries record two words: "Welsh rabbit" and "Welsh rarebit," each being pronounced as it is spelled. "Welsh rabbit" was supposed, at one time, to be a corruption of "Welsh rarebit," but as that opinion is now regarded as erroneous, "Welsh rabbit" has come into repute, and is now the form preferred by many.

Rarely ever; Seldom ever.

One properly says, "I rarely (or seldom) if ever go there," not "I rarely (or seldom) go there," the meaning being, "I rarely (or seldom) go, if I ever go."

Real.

Instead of "I am real sorry," one properly says, "I am very sorry." The adjective real being improperly used in the sense of very.

Reason why.

An explanatory clause following reason why is introduced by that,—as, "The reason why I have done this is that you might be benefited."

Receipt and Recipe.

One properly says, "The receipt calls for three cupfuls of flour," recipe being restricted in its use as a medical term. Century gives the following: "Receipt is distinguished from recipe by the common restriction of that word [recipe] to medical and relative uses; as, "A receipt for a pudding."

Recollect and Remember.

We recollect that which we have difficulty in recalling; we remember that which we have not forgotten; as, "By degrees he recollected them and where he had first met them;" "I shall always remember your kindness."

Reduce and Lessen.

We reduce that which we bring to a specified form; we lessen that which we diminish; as, "His weight has been reduced by this method of treatment;" "The number of mistakes has been lessened by this method."

Relation and Relative.

Instead of saying, "He is a relation of mine," one properly says, "He is a relative of mine," relation being nicely restricted to other uses.

Relative and Relatively.

Instead of saying, "I shall write (or speak) to him relative to the matter," one properly says, "I shall write (or speak) to him relatively to the matter," the adverb being required to modify the verb. In the sentence, "I have received your letter relative to the matter," relative is correct, for the reason that the noun letter is modified, and hence, the adjective is correctly employed. Again, in such constructions as, "Relatively to your agreement to pay twenty-five dollars a month on your account, we respectfully call your attention," etc., the adverb is required, for the reason that the word modifies the verb call.

RELATIVE PRONOUNS.*

The following are the rules that govern the relative pronouns who, which, what and that:

* CORRECT ENGLISH: A COMPLETE GRAMMAR.

A relative pronoun is a pronoun that relates to an antecedent (noun or pronoun), and at the same time performs the office of a conjunction.*

(a) The relative pronouns are who, which, that, and what. As and but are occasionally used as relative pronouns. (Read p. 197, 3.)

(b) The relative pronoun always relates to an antecedent (a noun or pronoun in a preceding clause), and at the same time connects the clause that it introduces with the one that contains the antecedent to which it relates, as, "I have read the book that you sent me." That is a relative pronoun, first, because it relates to the antecedent book, in the preceding clause (I have read the book), and secondly, because it performs the office of a conjunction in that it connects the clause, "you sent me," which it introduces, with the clause, "I have read the book," which contains the antecedent (book) to which it relates.

(c) The compound relative pronouns are who-so, whoever, whosoever, whichever, whichsoever, whatever, whatsoever.

Who, which, and what were not used in Anglo-Saxon as relatives. They were originally interrogative pronouns. That, originally a demonstrative pronoun, was the first to become a relative pronoun.

DECLENSION.

Who and which are declined. That and what are not declined.

* CORRECT ENGLISH: A COMPLETE GRAMMAR.

WHO

		Singular.	Plural.
Case.	Nominative	who	who
	Possessive	whose	whose
	Objective	whom	whom

WHICH

Case.	Nominative	which	which
	Possessive	whose	which
	Objective	which	which

Examples of the correct use of the relative pronouns, who, which, that, and what:

1. I gave the money to the driver, who will give it to his employer.

2. I brought her a book, from the library, which she enjoyed very much.

3. This is the house that she bought.

4. I do not want you to repeat what I have told you.

(a) In the last sentence what is equivalent to that which or the thing which. It differs from the other relative pronouns in that its antecedent is never expressed, it being implied in the word itself (that which).

(b) What is always of the neuter gender, and is used in only the nominative and the objective case. Who, whose, and whom are either masculine and feminine (common gender) and are used, respectively, in the nominative, the possessive, and the objective case.

(c) Which is neuter and may be used in either the nominative or the objective case.

(d) Whose is the form of the possessive for either who or which.

(e) Who is now used chiefly of persons, also of animals, and sometimes even of things, when represented with some of the attributes of humanity, as in personification or vivid description.

Ex.—(Of persons) “The man who would attain to greatness must be great.” (Of animals when they are referred to as human beings) “Animals who by proper application of rewards and punishments may be taught any course of action.” (In personification) “And you, ye stars, who slowly begin to marshal, as of old, in the fields of heaven.”

(f) Which is used only of animals and things.

Ex.—(Of animals) “He owns a dog, which has taken the first prize at every show.” (Of things) “Unto her face she lifts her hand, which rests there still a space, then slowly falls.”

(g) The antecedent may also be a phrase or a clause.

Ex.—(The antecedent is a clause) “The rain washed the track, which delayed the train.” The rain washed the track is a clause and is the antecedent of which.

Constructions like the foregoing kind are censured by some critics.

(h) Who and which should be used when a new fact is added. Thus, “I heard the story from Mrs. Black, who (and she) heard it from Mr. White.”

Exceptions to the use of that:

(a) That cannot be used when a preposition is required before it.

(b) That cannot be used when the meaning is, “and he,” “and she,” “and it;” thus, in the sentence, “I met a man, who kindly showed me the way,” the meaning is, “I met a man, and he kindly showed me the way.” In the sentence, “I studied geometry, which I found difficult,” the meaning is, "I studied geometry, and I found it difficult."

(c) That should not be used when the antecedent is modified by that; thus: Such constructions as, "That boy who called yesterday," "That book which you lent me," are more euphonious than "That boy that called yesterday;" "That book that you lent me."

Grammarians have a tendency to use that strictly as a limiting or definite relative pronoun, just as the is used as a definite or limiting article. Inasmuch as many writers prefer to use that when the sense is restrictive, the following suggestions are given:

That is preferable to who and which in the following cases:

(a) When the antecedent to which it refers denotes both persons and things; as, "I counted the children and the dogs that came out to greet me."

(b) When the clause that it introduces, or of which it is the subject, limits or defines the antecedent; as, "Give me the money that you collected." "Bring me the book that is lying on the table." In both sentences, the dependent clauses, that you collected and that is lying on the table, are restrictive, that limiting the antecedent just as the adjective the in the sentence, "The minister has come," limits the meaning by distinguishing that particular minister from the rest of his class.

Who and which are preferable to that in the following cases:

(a) Who is preferable to that when its antecedent is already restricted. Thus, "My friend from New York whom I had invited to visit me is unable to come." The antecedent of whom is friend. Friend is limited by my, hence, whom is preferred to that.

(b) Which is preferable to that when it is necessary to repeat the pronoun in a subsequent clause in such constructions as, "The book which you lent me and to which you have just referred," are preferable to "The book that you lent me and to which," etc.

When a preposition is not required, that is preferable; as, "The book that you lent and that I have just finished," etc.

(c) Who is preferable to that after indefinite pronouns. Thus, "There are many who could not come." "There are several who are absent." "There are those who would hesitate to accept such terms, while there are others who would not."

(d) If the relative is separated from its verb, who or which is preferable to that; thus: "There are men who, although tempted, never fall, and who, no matter what influences surround them, never compromise with their ideals."

Which is more euphonious than that in such constructions as, "The objective complement is the word that completes the meaning of the verb which it follows."

Relative pronoun, Omission of.

The relative pronoun should not be omitted when required as a subject or an object of a verb; thus: in the sentence, "It was his father, George Carvel, my great grand-sire, reared the present house in the year 1740," the presence of the relative pronoun who is required in order that the verb reared may be supplied with a subject. In the sentence, "Curiously, even as I fought desperately, I compared him with that other lad I had known," the relative pronoun whom is required in order that the verb had known may be supplied with an object. For omission and repetition of the conjunction that, see That.

Remainder and Balance.

See Balance.

Remainder, Rest.

For singular and plural use, see Concord of Subject and Verb.

Remit.

Remit should not be used in place of send. Remit means "to send back."

Remote, Distant.

Remote and distant mean removed far from present time; or located far from a specific place; as: "remote ancestors," "remote future," "remote regions," "distant relatives," "distant place," "distant future." One feels, occasionally, a difference between these words without being able readily to define it; thus, we speak of distant relatives, but refer to our remote ancestors.

Replace and Succeed.

A nice distinction in meaning restricts replace to mean that which fills the place of something else; succeed, that which comes next; as, "I can replace the broken vase by another just like it;" "His brother succeeded him in his position as secretary.

Reside and Live.

The simple word live is preferable to reside when referring to one's place of residence, reside being reserved for more stately occasions.

Residence.

Home or house is preferable to residence except when speaking of a pretentious looking dwelling, when residence may be used. As a rule, however, either house or home is preferably used.

Respectfully and Respectively.

Respectfully means in a respectful manner; respectively refers to persons or things thought of singly; as, "He behaved respectfully toward his parents;" "The names of the boys are, respectively, John, Henry, and James.

RESTRICTIVE AND NON-RESTRICTIVE CLAUSES.

(a) A relative clause introduced by that is called a restrictive clause, for the reason that it limits or restricts the meaning of that which it modifies. A relative clause introduced by who is non-restrictive when it adds a new fact.

(b) While who or which is often used even when the sense is restrictive, that should never be used unless the sense is restrictive. When instead of the relative pronoun who or which, the words and I, and she, and he, and it, etc., can be substituted, the pronoun who or which may be used; as, "I have returned the books, which I found very interesting" (and I found them very interesting).

(c) When the clause is introduced by the relative pronoun what, the clause is used, not as a modifier, but as a noun. Thus, in the sentence, "I do not know what to say," what to say is a noun clause used as the object of the verb know.

Reverend.

Reverend is merely an adjective, and in consequence, it cannot be used in place of the title Mr. or the initials. The is used to point out the particular Mr. Smith; as, "The Reverend Mr.

Smith," or "The Reverend John H. Smith." The is correctly used when speaking of the gentleman designated; also correctly used in the superscription on the envelope. In the address of the letter, the following style may be used:

Reverend Mr. Smith,
Chicago, Ill.

Reverend Sir:

(or Dear Sir or Reverend and Dear Sir.)

Reverse to or of.

"Reverse of" is correct in such constructions as, "This is the reverse side of (not to) that."

Right.

Instead of "He has a right to be punished," one properly says, "He deserves to be punished," the use of right in the sense of moral obligation or necessity being recorded as a barbarous Britticism or Hibernicism.

Right away.

Instantly or at once is suggested as preferable to right away.

Rights and Privileges.

A privilege is "something peculiar to one or some as distinguished from others; a prerogative;" so that the term is to be employed relatively. "The rights and privileges of the people," as often used absolutely in political platforms, demagogical speeches, and radical newspapers, is incorrect, since the people in this sense can have no privileges, i. e., "things peculiar to individuals." Milton's use is correct when he says "We do not mean to destroy all the people's rights and privileges," since he is speaking of the people relatively, as distinguished from the magistrates and the king.

Standard Dictionary.

Right and Very.

Right is incorrectly used in the sense of very; as, "I am right well," "She is right pretty," instead of "I am very well," "She is very pretty."

Rise and Arise.

Note—The choice between the verbs rise and arise depends somewhat on rhythm, although literal meanings, or those which seem literal, have become associated with rise, and figurative meanings with arise. Thus, "Early to bed and early to rise," etc. (literal); "The sun is rising" (literal); "He rose from his chair" (literal); "He had risen early" (literal); "If trouble arises (figurative) I will help you;" "Music arose (figurative) with her soft, voluptuous swell;" "A false prophet has arisen" (figurative); "Complications arising (figurative) from lack of knowledge caused much difficulty."

Rise and Raise.

Rise means to move upwards; raise means to cause to rise; as, "He raised the bread with yeast;" "The bread is rising." The principal parts of rise are: present, rise; past, rose; present participle, rising; past participle, risen. The principal parts of raise are: present, raise; past raised; present participle, raising; past participle, raised. Thus one properly says: "The sun rises in the east;" "The sun rose in the east;" "The sun is rising in the east;" "The sun has risen in the east;" "Raise the window;" "He raised the window;" "He is raising the window;" "He has raised the window."

S.

'S (Apostrophe and the letter s).

See Possessive Case and Double Possessives.

Sabbath and Sunday.

Sabbath carries a more direct reference to the Mosaic economy, with a suggestion of sacred rest than does Sunday (dies solis), a name given by the heathen to the first day of the week. Sabbath and Sunday are used somewhat interchangeably; as, "Sabbath school," or "Sunday school." When the reference is merely to the first day of the week, we use Sunday; as, "A Sunday dinner."

Same.

The use of same in the sense of it, as, "We have your letter of the 5th inst. and in reply to same," etc., is not in accordance with the best business usage. Same is properly used when a noun is understood as following it; as "My vocation is the same as yours," vocation being understood after same. In brief, same is properly used as an adjective, but not as a pronoun.

Same and Similar.

Same expresses identity; similar, likeness; as, "This is the same hat that I had last year" (the one possessed by me last year); "This hat is similar to the one I had last year" (like the hat). Again, same may be used to express identity of kind in such cases as, "All men possess in a greater or less degree the same love of self." While same is properly used in this way, it should not be substituted for similar. One properly says: "This weather is similar to that of last July," or "This is the same kind of weather," etc., but not "This is the same weather," etc.

Sameness and Similarity.

Sameness indicates absolute resemblance; Similarity, a partial resemblance.

Sanatory and Sanitary.

Sanatory means conducive to health; sanitary means hygienic. Sanatory refers only to that which is good; sanitary, to that which is either good or bad; as: "The methods were sanatory" (good; conducive to health); "The sanitary conditions of the house were such that the family was obliged to move" (bad).

Sanatorium, Sanitarium, and Sanatorium.

Sanatorium is recorded in Century as the only correct spelling of the word; but while sanitarium is always incorrect, there is now a growing tendency to use sanatorium to designate a place where active measures for treatment obtains, and sanatarium where the conditions are such as to be favorable to recovery.

Sang and Sung; Sank and Sunk.

See Have, Has, and Had.

Saw and Seen.

Use saw to express a specific time in the past; seen to express time perfected in the past, present, or future; as, I saw him yesterday; I had seen him the day before we parted; I have often seen him since. I shall have seen him by six o'clock this evening. (Do not use seen without have, has, had, was or is.)

I saw him yesterday.

I have just seen him.

I saw her at the theater on Monday.

I have never seen her.

I saw him in New York.

I have never seen him.

I saw you on the street the other day.
I have often seen you on the street.
I shall have seen him by this time to-morrow.

Says I.

Says I is a most objectionable expression and is always incorrectly used for "I said."

Scarcely and Hardly.

See Hardly.

Scholar and Pupil.

In nice usage, scholar is used of one who is distinguished for his possession or pursuit of knowledge; pupil is used of one who is a member of a school.

Scribes and Pharisees.

The following are the recorded meanings of scribe and Pharisee:

SCRIBE.—(a) In scriptural usage, one whose duty it was to keep the official records of the Jewish nation, or to act as the private secretary of some distinguished person.

(b) One of a body of men who constituted the theologians and priests of the Jewish nation in the time of Christ. Their function was a three-fold one: to develop the law, both written and traditional, to teach it to their pupils, and to administer it as learned interpreters in the courts of justice.

PHARISEE.—One of an ancient Jewish school, sect, or party, which was specially exact in its interpretation and observance of the law, both canonical and traditional.

In this connection, note that scribes is not capitalized unless it begins a sentence, but that Pharisees is capitalized, the distinction being attributable to the fact that the scribes were merely a body of men of a particular vocation, while the Pharisees were a sect.

Scarcely.

See Hardly.

Second and Secondly.

The adjectives second, third, etc., are required when the noun is modified; the adverbs secondly, thirdly, when the verb is modified. First, of course, is the form for both the adjective and the adverb. Thus, in the following construction, the noun is modified; hence the adjective is required; thus:

“The subject is treated under three heads: first, the history of the tariff; second, the present condition of the tariff system; third, features of the present system that are capable of improvement.” (First head; second head; third head.)

In the following construction, the verb is modified; hence, the adverb is required; thus: “The pupil should study the rules of grammar; first, because, etc; secondly, because, etc., and thirdly, because, etc.

Note that when the meaning is in the second (third, fourth, etc.) case, the adverb is required.

Seasonable, Timely, and Opportune.

In nice usage, seasonable refers to that which is in keeping with the season; timely, with that which occurs at the right time; opportune, with that which is either seasonable or timely.

See and Witness.

See is used of persons or things; witness, more appropriately of events, or incidents; as, “I saw him last evening and witnessed his triumph and mastery of his opponent.”

Seldom or Ever.

See Rarely or Ever.

Sensual and Sensuous.

Sensual is used of one who indulges his animal appetites; sensuous, of one who has a keen appreciation of the beautiful; of those things which affect the senses.

Sequence of Tenses.

The following is the rule that governs the sequence of tenses in indirect quotation:

When the time of the principal verb is past, that of the subordinate verb must not be present, unless the subordinate sentence states a fact that is unchanging and universal; thus: "He said that his name was John;" "Galileo maintained that the earth is round." Note the following: Faulty diction is often the result of failure to employ the proper sequence of tenses in complex sentences. By what is called the attraction of tenses, the requirement is, as a rule, that the tense of the dependent verb shall be present when that of the principal verb is present, and past when that of the principal verb is past. Thus: "He says that he is tired," becomes when reported as a past state, "He said that he was tired." "He says that his friend is living," becomes "He said that his friend was living;" "He said that his friend is living" is contrary to English analogy.

And again: To the general rule of the attraction of tenses one notable exception is that, when the dependent sentence states a fact that is unchanging or universal and hence always existing, the present tense is retained in the dependent sentence even when the action of the principal verb is transferred to the past. "He says that space is infinite" becomes "He said that space is infinite." "He says that God is good" becomes "He said that God is good." But "He said that God was very bountiful to him," is correct because that is a fact alleged of a certain limited time. So, "He says that God will take care of him," becomes "He said that God would take care of him" as expressing confidence touching the destiny of one person, rather than a universal truth.—Standard.

"He affirmed that he would go tomorrow"; but "Galileo maintained that the earth is round."—Bain.

"He knew what the man's name was."—The Mother Tongue.

In connection with the foregoing, note the following:

When the quoted matter is, for example, [John says] "I am ill" becomes by indirect quotation, "John said that he was ill" (meaning that he is now ill), the past tense is required; but, when the matter to be quoted is already in the past tense, it becomes the past perfect in indirect quotation; thus: "John heard that his friend was ill" becomes in indirect quotation "John said that he had heard that his friend was ill."

(The following is illustrative of the rule that governs sequences of tenses in indirect quotation:)

John.—James Blank is ill.

Mother.—Mary, what does John say?

Mary.—John says that James Blank is ill.

Mother.—What was it that John said? I did not hear you.

Mary.—Why, John said that James Blank was ill.

Mother.—How did John hear the news?

Mary.—John heard the news at school; I mean, he said that he had heard the news from one of the boys at school.

Set and Settle.

Set, as in the sentence, "The sun sets," is a remnant of the verb settle; hence, "The sun sets," (not sits) is correct.

Set and Sit.*

RULE.—Use sit, sat, sitting, sat to express inaction; set, set, setting, set to express action (cause to sit).

SIT

I shall sit by the window for a little while.

He sat by her side for hours.

He has sat on this seat many a time.

How long shall you sit here?

Do not sit in this draft.

Come! Sit by my side.

Do not sit in the sun.

I have been sitting by the fire.

Have you been sitting here long?

He sat down hurriedly.

This dress sits well.

SET

I set the pail on the floor.

She set the table while I was waiting.

She is setting the table.

She set the child on the floor.

She had been setting the table.

I have been setting the chairs in their places.

Why do you not set the child down?

Do not set the pitcher of water there; set it here.

NOTE.—Seat is used in constructions like the following: “She seated the guests at the table.”

Settle and Pay.

One pays a bill and settles a disputed account.

Settlement For or Of.

“Settlement of,” like “payment of,” is correct in the wording, “I inclose ten dollars in settlement of my account. See Settle and Pay.”

Shrank and Shrunk.

See Have, Has, and Had.

Sickly Climate.

“Sickly climate” is incorrect, the word unhealthful being the required form.

Sideways.

“Sidewise” is the correct form. See Anyways and Anywise.”

Sieve and Seive.

A sieve is an apparatus for sifting matter; a seive (or more commonly, seave) is a rush or a wick made out of such.

Sight.

Sight, used in the sense of a great deal or a great many, as, “I have an awful sight of work to do,” is not in accordance with the best usage of the language.

Similar and Similarly.

See Same and Sameness.

Since and Ago.

See Ago.

Singular or Plural Verb.

See Concord of Subject and Verb.

Sit and Set.

See Set and Sit.

So and That.

Do not use that for so. Say, "The goods are so wide," not "The goods are that wide," using the hands to indicate the width.

This correct use of so must not be confused with its incorrect employment in the sense of very. See So and Very.

So and Very.

So should not be used for very; thus, instead of "I am so tired," one properly says, "I am very tired." So requires a clause of consequence to complete its meaning; as, "I was so tired that I fell asleep."

Social and Sociable.

When used as a noun; as, "A church sociable," sociable is recorded by Century as expressing the meaning. Standard records sociable and social as interchangeably employed in this sense. When used as an adjective, in the sense to associate with others; as, "a social" or "a sociable person," the words are interchangeably employed. Social is restrictively used to express that which is characteristic of a sociable person; as, "He is a man of social tastes." Again, social as pertaining to a society, or to the community as a body; as, "social duties;" "social interests;" "social problems" (not sociable).

Society Has.

The singular verb is required in such constructions as, "The society has adjourned for the summer." When the individuals are referred to, the plural verb is required; as, "The society have quarreled among themselves." See Collective Nouns.

Solicitor.

Solicitor is a term used in England of an attorney who practices in the supreme courts, but both attorneys and solicitors confine themselves simply to instituting action and furnishing material for the argument of the barrister, or counsel.

In the United States, where the term barrister is not used, the terms attorney and counsel are practically interchangeable. In equity proceedings, the attorney or counsel is called a solicitor; in admiralty, a proctor.

In its specific use, proctor is a practitioner in an admiralty, ecclesiastical or probate court.

An attorney (private) is one whose practice is restricted to business out of court; a public attorney, or attorney-at-law, is qualified to practice in the courts. In this connection, note the following: The term lawyer is general, it being applicable to an attorney (private), an attorney-at-law, a barrister, a solicitor, an advocate, a sergeant, or a proctor.

In its broad sense, advocate is used of one who pleads the case of another in a legal (or ecclesiastical) court, but technically, it is the title used for counselor (or counsel) in those countries which retain the Roman law, as France and Scotland, also in admiralty courts, and many special tribunals, existing or historical, but not in ordinary English or American courts.

Some and Somewhat.

Somewhat, and not some, is required to express degree; as, "He has grown somewhat," not some. "He is somewhat better," not "some better."

Some One They.

See Anyone . . . they.

Something and Somewhat.

Something used as an adverb in the sense of somewhat, meaning in some extent or degree, must be employed very sparingly, as this use of something is obsolete except in exceptional phrases; as, "something like." According to this it would be equally correct to say, "Something like a year ago;" "Somewhat like a year ago;" "She looks something like you;" "She looks somewhat like you." I note that the expression, "Somewhat more than a year ago," is recorded as correct; it would probably be regarded as correct to say "Something more than a year ago;" but because of the restricted use of something in the sense of somewhat, it would seem preferable to use somewhat when extent or degree is implied.

Sort and Kind.

Sort and kind, in the sense of class or species, are largely interchangeable; as, "I do not like that sort (or kind) of thing." Again, when used to express mere resemblance, the words are also interchangeably, though idiomatically used; as, "He has a sort of (or kind of) low fever."

For use of sort and kind with that and this, see That and This kind.

Sounds Sweet, Loud, Correct.

See Adjective After the Verb.

Sparrow-grass.

Asparagus is the correct word, not aspara-gruss or grass.

Speak and Talk.

Speak is more general in meaning than talk; thus, a man may speak by uttering a single word, whereas, to talk is to utter words consecutively; so a man may be able to speak without being able to talk. Speak is also more formal in meaning; as, to speak before an audience; while talk implies a conversational manner of speaking.

Speak to or Speak With.

When one wishes merely to communicate a fact to some one else, speak to is the correct wording; when one wishes to converse with another, speak with is the required form; as, "I wish to speak to Mr. Black" (communicate a fact); "I wish to speak with him" (converse with him).

Specially and Especially.

See Especially.

Speciality, Specialty.

Speciality (pronounced speshi-al-it-y) is the state or quality of being special; specialty is used of an employment to which one is specially devoted.

Spell.

Spell used in the sense of an indefinite period of time is not in accordance with the best usage of the language. Instead of saying, "I am going to visit her for a spell," one properly says, "I am going to visit her for a short time," or "for a few days" or "weeks," as the case may require. Spell used of a definite duration of time; as, "We have had the longest spell of cold weather that I have ever known," is correctly employed. Spell used to express a "bad term," an uncomfortable time; as, "He has had a spell," is recorded as colloquial. On the other hand, the wording, "He has had a bad spell," would be permissible.

Splendid.

Splendid is properly applied to a great career, or achievement, and by extension to that which is brilliant; as, "a splendid jewel," "a splendid deed;" such expressions as "a splendid gown," "a splendid dinner," are objectionable. Say "a showy (or magnificent) gown;" "an excellent dinner."

"SPLIT INFINITIVE."

The Separation of to, the Sign of the Infinitive, From Its Verb.*

The separation of to, the sign of the infinitive, from its verb, is almost universally censured by grammarians, to being regarded by them as a part of the verb itself, and, hence, not to be separated from it by the introduction of the adverb.

The history of the infinitive, however, shows that in no sense is to a part of the verb, nor is it, in all instances, essential to its meaning, for many verbs drop the preposition to when used with such verbs as have, may, can, shall, will, do, dare, etc.

*CORRECT ENGLISH: A COMPLETE GRAMMAR.

The preposition to must be regarded, not as a part of the infinitive, but merely as the insignia of the gerundial or infinitive nature of the verb.

The preposition to is not, nor has it ever been, incorporated into the verb itself; therefore, it can be readily seen that there is no essential reason why it should not be separated from its verb by the introduction of the adverb, especially when by this position the meaning is more clearly or emphatically expressed. In the language of Professor Lounsbury, "This practice, examples of which go as far back, certainly as the fifteenth century, has now become quite common. In spite of the opposition that it encounters, there is little question that it will establish itself permanently in the language."

In many constructions, greater force and perspicuity can be gained by placing the adverb before the sign of the infinitive; but, in other constructions, the meaning is more clearly expressed by inserting the adverb between the preposition and the infinitive. To illustrate, the construction, "To really know a person, one must know him intimately," more clearly expresses the meaning than does the form, "Really to know a person one must know him intimately;" or, "To know a person really, one must know him intimately." On the other hand, the construction, "It is a scene never to be forgotten," is more forceful than "It is a scene to never be forgotten." Thus we see that the rule given by grammarians: "To," the sign of the infinite, should never be separated from its verb, should be modified by the clause, unless the meaning can be more clearly expressed by the insertion of the adverb.

Spoonfuls.

See Cupfuls and Teaspoonfuls.

Sprang and Sprung.

See Have, Has, and Had.

Stand point.

See Point of view.

Standing Up.

Standard sanctions "stand up," meaning to stand or cause to stand erect; as, "She felt too ill to stand up."

Stationary and Stationery.

Stationary refers to that which remains in one place; stationery is used of writing material. The pronunciation is the same in both. (By associating the a in ary with a in place (stationary and place), one can remember how to distinguish between stationary and stationery.

Still continue.

Still is superfluous with continue; as, "I shall still continue my studies in English."

Stimulant and Stimulus.

A stimulant is that which quickens the action of some organ; as, "Coffee and tea are stimulants;" a stimulus is that which inspires one to act; as "The offer of a reward is often the stimulus that leads to success."

Stood silent.

The adjective silent, not the adverb silently, is required after stood, the reference being to the subject; as, "He stood silent," meaning "He was silent." The adverb is required after stood when the reference is to the meaning of standing; as, "He stood quietly," that is, without moving.

Stop and Stay.

Stop should not be used in the sense of stay; stop is the reverse of start, and indicates only a short period of rest in one's travel; thus: we say, "I shall stop at Evanston for a few hours on my way to Racine, but I shall stay at the latter place for several days."

Stricken.

Standard gives the following: "As a past participle of strike, archaic in England, except when there is an implication in it of misfortune; as, 'He was stricken with paralysis.' In the United States stricken, in general application, is not so distinctly archaic, and its use in reference to the erasure of words is very frequent; as, 'It is ordered that the words objected to be stricken out.' In the best literary usage of both countries struck is preferred to stricken when no implication of misfortune is conveyed in it. Stricken is the appropriate participial adjective; as, 'a stricken man;' 'a stricken deer.'"

Subjunctive Mode.

See If it is and If it be; If it was and If it were.

Subject and Verb.

See Concord of Subject and Verb.

Subscribe and Subscription.

We subscribe for a paper, but speak of our subscription to it; as, "Last year I subscribed for only two magazines; this year I shall enter my subscription to several."

Subtile and Subtle.

Subtile (pronounced sut'l or sub'til) and subtle (pronounced sut'l) are interchangeably used. These words have several meanings, of which the following are some of the most important:

1. Thin; exceedingly fine; rarefied; as, "a subtile (or subtle) order;" "a subtile (or subtle) powder;" "a subtile (or subtle) medium."

2. Delicately constructed; refined; dainty; as, "The more frequently and narrowly we look into them [works of nature], the more occasion we shall have to admire their fine and subtile texture; their beauty," etc.

3. Sly, insinuating, artful, cunning, crafty, deceitful, treacherous; as, "A subtile (or subtle) scheme."

4. Cunningly devised; artfully contrived or handled; clever; as, "A subtle (or subtile) stratagem."

5. Characterized by acuteness and penetration of mind; sagacious; quick-witted; as, "a subtile (or subtle) understanding;" "subtile (or subtle) penetration or insight."

6. Ingenious; skilful; clever; handy; as, "a subtile (or subtle) operator."

Such.

Such is censured by critics when used in the sense of so. Instead of "I have never read such an interesting book," one properly says, "I never read so interesting a book." See So.

Such, like so, is properly followed by a "that clause;" as, "It was such a rainy day that I was obliged to remain at home."

Such like.

1. "Such like," is a pleonasm; either such or like being redundant. In such sentences as, "We read novels and such like," such is incorrectly used, "We read novels and the like," being the correct form.

Sun shines bright.

Those who regard the verb shines as being modified, would require the adverb brightly to be used; those who construe shine as being merely equivalent to the verb is, would use the adjective bright. In poetry, bright is common. In other words, both bright and brightly are in use.

Suppose and Expect.

Expect properly refers to the future; suppose, to the present, past, or future. Again, expect expresses expectation; it should not be used for suppose, which expresses a supposition; thus: we should say, "I suppose you will go;" on the other hand we say, "I expect him this evening." The following are correct uses of these words:

I suppose that you had a pleasant time yesterday. (Not expect.)

I suppose that you will have a pleasant time this evening. (Not expect.)

I suppose that he is offended. (Not expect.)

I suppose that he will be late this evening. (Not expect.)

I suppose that you were late at school this morning. (Not expect.)

I expect to go to New York next week.

I am expecting a telegram every minute.

I am expecting a letter from my brother.

Do you expect to go?

Sure and Surely.

The adverb surely, not the adjective sure, is required in response to the question, "Are you really going?" "Surely" meaning, "I am surely going."

Swam and Swum.

See Have, Has, and Had.*

Sweetly.

The adjective sweet, and not the adverb sweetly, is required after verbs of inaction; as, "The flower smells sweet" (not sweetly). See Adverb or Adjective.

Symbol, Emblem, Type.

Symbol and emblem are interchangeable in meaning when used in the sense of something whose predominant quality symbolizes something else; as, "A white robe is a symbol (or emblem) of purity;" Type is used in the sense of emblem; but, while symbol and emblem refer only to tangible objects, type refers

*Bound Volume IX. p. 147.

also to an act, as, for example, the lifting of the brazen serpent is said to be a type of the crucifixion. (Type has, of course, another meaning,—that of a definite standard, or a model or pattern.)

Century gives the following:

“A symbol is generally an emblem which has become recognized or standard among men; a volume proposing new signs of this sort would be called ‘a book of emblems,’ but an emblem may be a symbol, as the bread and wine at the Lord’s supper are more often called emblems than symbols of Christ’s death. Symbol is, by this rule, the appropriate word for the conventional signs in mathematics. Emblem is most often used of moral and religious matters, and type, chiefly of religious doctrines, institutions, historical facts, etc. Type in its religious application generally points forward to an antitype.” [Antitype,—that which is represented by a type and, therefore, is correlative with it. Type, in one of its meanings, being a foreshadowing of some reality to come, points forward to an antitype; as, “The paschal lamb is the type of Christ, who is the antitype.”]

“Rose of the desert! thou art to me
An emblem of stainless purity.”

“The cock is the symbol of fire, and it is even to this day a common expression among the Norsemen, when a fire breaks out, that the cock is crowing on the roof of the house.”

“Beauty was lent to Nature as the type
Of heaven’s unspeakable and holy joy.”

I thank you for your very kind expressions of appreciation.

T.

Take.

Take is properly followed by an object; as, "Are you going to take music-lessons of your former teacher?" not "Are you going to take of your former teacher?"

Tastily.

Tastily should not be used for tastefully. Instead of saying, "The room was tastily arranged," one properly says, "The room was tastefully arranged."

Teaspoonfuls.

See Cupfuls.

Tend and Attend.

Tend means to move or be directed; hold a course; as, "Our argument seems, for some time, to have been tending towards this point;" again, tend means to have a bent or inclination to effective action in some particular direction; as, "Exercise tends to strengthen the muscles." Tend is also used in the sense of to serve, contribute or conduce in some way; as, "This condition of affairs may tend to your advantage."

Attend means to accompany (literally or figuratively); as, "May good fortune attend you in all things." Attend means also to give attention; as, "Attend to what he tells you."

Tense, Past and Perfect.

The past tense expresses a specific time in the past; the perfect tense expresses time that reaches to the present, thus: (past) "I saw him yesterday," (perfect) "I have just seen him." See Have, Has, and Had; Have ever.

Tenses.

See Sequence of Tenses; Past Tenses.

Than and But.

One properly says, "It was no one else than he," or, "It was no one else but him."

See Else.

Than Me or Than I; Than Whom.

Than connects clauses, and not words; hence, such constructions as, "The painting was done by no other than I" (than I was other), are correct. Than, in constructions of this kind, often has the appearance of a preposition, requiring after it an objective form: but it is generally conceded by grammarians to be a conjunction connecting two clauses, one of which may be elliptical. Sometimes, there is an ellipsis of the verb as in the sentence, "He is taller than I," and sometimes there is an ellipsis of both subject and verb as in the sentence, "I like you better than him," that is, "I like you better than I like him."

The expression "than whom" as in the sentence, "Satan than whom none higher sat," is idiomatic,—incorrect according to the grammar of the language, but correct as to its usage.

In connection with the use of than as a connective of clauses, and not of words, Raub gives the following:

"Than, as a conjunction, is used to connect sentences; as, 'He is older than I' (am old). Dr. Hodgson and some others take the ground that than must connect like cases, nominative with nominative, and objective with objective. Thus, they would condemn the following sentence from Kingsley's Westward Ho: 'Think not of me, good fellows, nor talk of me; but come behind me decently, as Christian men, and follow to the grave the body of a better man than I' and change the I to me, on the ground that the conjunction connects the noun man in the objective with the pronoun I, which they claim should also be in the objective case.

"The conjunction than connects sentences here as elsewhere, and the sentence means, 'follow to the grave a better man than I' (am good), and it is correct as written by Mr. Kingsley.

"So also the following from Dickens, which Dr. Hodgson condemns, is correct: 'The smooth manner of the spy, cautiously in dissonance with his ostentatiously rough dress, and probably with his usual demeanor, received such a check from the inscrutability of Carton, who was a mystery to wiser and honester men than he, that it falters here, and failed him.' "

That.

For special uses of the pronoun that see Relative Pronouns.

That, Repetition of.

That should be repeated when it is desired to connect a subordinate clause as in the following: "He said that he would come and that he would bring the papers with him," not "and he would," etc.; or the subject pronoun in the subordinate clause may be omitted; as, "He said that he would come and would bring the papers with him." In other words, and must not connect dissimilar elements.

That, Superfluous Use of.

Care must be taken not to repeat that in such constructions as, "The opening of this new department is in response to the suggestion that, since this store sells everything for which the Sewing Machine is used, that the machine itself is essential to meet our customers' requirements."

The first that grammatically introduces the clause, "that the machine itself is essential," etc.

That and So.

See So.

That and This.

That expresses what is remote; this, what is near. For example, this, and not that, is required in such constructions as, "They were fortified by their great ambitions and by their consciousness of supreme power; for this (not that) reason, many of us are likely," etc.

That and This Kind.

This and that are used with kind; these and those with kinds; as, "I like these kinds (not these kind) of books," or "I like books of this or that kind."

While these or those kinds is frequently used when referring to only one kind, in strict usage, this or that kind should be employed, unless different kinds are meant. Thus; one properly says: "This (or that) kind of book" or "Books of this or that kind." For two or more kinds one says, "These or those kinds of books." The same rule applies to sort and style. In connection with kind, note that when some and all are employed, the plural kinds is always required; as, "I like some (or all) kinds of books," not "some (or all) kind of books."

The.

See Article, Repetition of.

Their for One.

See One.

Them for These.

Them is correctly used only of persons or things previously mentioned; as, "Give money to those (not them) who need it." Again instead of "Give me them things," one properly says, "Give me those things."

Thence and Whence.

From is superfluous when used before thence and whence.

There.

When there is used in the place of the real subject, the verb is singular or plural according as the real subject is singular or plural. See Concord of Subject and Verb.

Therefor and Therefore.

Therefor means for this or that; as, "We will sell the building and so much land as is needed therefor. Therefore means for this or that reason; as, "He has disobeyed me; therefore, he cannot go."

Think and Guess.

"I think I shall," not "I guess I will," is the correct wording, guess being restricted to such uses as, "Guess who was here last evening;" "You cannot guess who was here." See Guess, Suppose, Think.

Third and Thirdly.

See Second and Secondly.

Thought and Idea.

Thought and idea are largely interchangeable in such expressions as, "The idea occurred to me;" "The thought occurred to me." The following are some of the recorded definitions of thought and idea:

Thought.—1. The act or the product of thinking.

(a) In the most concrete sense, a single step in a process of thinking; a notion; a reflection.

"They are never alone . . . that are accompanied with noble thoughts."

(b) The condition or state of a person during such mental action.

"Sir Bedwere . . . paced beside the mare . . . fixed in thought."

(c) A synonym of cognition in the common threefold division of modes of consciousness.

"Feeling, thought, and action are to a certain extent opposed, or mutually exclusive, states of mind.

(d) The objective element of the intellectual product; as, "Thought always precedes from the less to the more determinate."

(e) A judgment or mental proposition, in which form the concept always appears.

2. An intention; a half-formed determination; as, "I have some thought of going to Europe."

Idea.—A mental image or picture. In the language of Descartes and of English philosophers, an immediate object of thought—that is, what one feels when one feels, or fancies when one fancies, or thinks when one thinks; an opinion; a thought, especially, one not well established by evidence.

Those who or Those that.

“Those who” is regarded as preferable to “those that,” the rule being that after indefinite pronouns, those, some, any one, etc., who is the better word.

Through for Finished.

See Finished.

Till and Until.

Till and until are interchangeable when the meaning is “to the time of;” as, “He waited till (or until) 4 o’clock.” The form “from 3 until 5 o’clock” is more frequently used in invitations than either till or to.

To.

A sentence should not end with to when to is a part of the infinitive; as, for example, “I don’t wish to,” instead of “I don’t wish to go.”

See Prepositions at the end of the Sentence.

To a degree.

Instead of “His dress was careless to a degree,” one properly says, “His dress was extremely careless,” “to a degree” lacking definitiveness of expression.

To and Of.

See Of the time.

To Be.*

The following special rules govern the use of the pronoun after the verb to be:

* CORRECT ENGLISH DRILL BOOK.

General Rule.—The noun or pronoun that follows the verb to be (am, is, are, was, were, have been, has been, had been, shall be, will be, etc.) is in the same case as the noun or pronoun that preceded the verb be.

Special Rule.—The pronouns I, he, she, we, they follow the verbs am, is, was, were, have been, has been, had been, can be, could be, may be, might be, shall be, will be; thus:

I am he (she). That is not she (he).

It is I (he, she, we, they). We are not they.
 They are not we.

It is not I (he, she, we, they). Those are they.
 Those are not they.

He is not I. These are they.

You are not he (I, she, we). These are not they.

It was not I that spoke.

Is it they whom you mean?

I think that you will find that it was she who did it.

Caution.—When the pronoun follows the infinitive to be, caution is necessary, thus: in the sentence, "I supposed it to be him," him, and not he, is required, for the reason that to be is a verb in this sentence, and, hence, the pronoun that precedes the verb to be is in the objective case.

Rule.—The subject of the infinitive is in the objective case.

Special Rule.—The pronouns me, her, him, us, them, follow to be when to be is preceded by a noun or a pronoun; thus:

I supposed it to be her (him, them).

I thought it to be him (her, them).

They supposed it to be me (her, him, us, them).

I cannot imagine it to be her (him, them).

Can you imagine it to be them?

How could you suppose it to be me?

How could you suppose it to be them?

General Rule.—The noun or pronoun that follows the infinitive to be when the infinitive is not a verb, is in the nominative case.

Note.—The infinitive when a verb is always preceded by a noun or a pronoun in the objective case.

Special Rule.—The pronouns I, he, she, we, they follow to be when to be is not preceded by a noun or a pronoun.

Note that in the following sentences to be is not preceded by a noun or a pronoun:

It was supposed to be I who made the error.

It was supposed to be she who called.

It was thought to be he to whom the speaker referred.

I should like to be he (she, they).

I should not like to be she.

How should you like to be I?

It was not she who called.

It was not we who made the mistake.

It was not they to whom he referred.

It could not have been I, for I was out of town.

It could not have been they who called.

It may have been he (she, they).

I hardly think that it was he to whom Mr. Blank referred.

I think it was she, not he, who called.

If it had been he who called, I should have seen him.

He thinks it was I who called.

He thinks it was she who invited him.

They know it was not we who engaged the rooms.

He says it was he who sold her the goods.

We think it is they, and they think it is we.

If I had been she, I should not have left the room.

If you had been I, you would have acted the same way.

If he had been she, he would not have cared.

It is I to whom you are speaking.

Is it she to whom you refer?

Is it we that are to receive the gifts?

Should you like to be we?

I think that I should like to be she.

Do you think that you should like to be he?

General Rule.—A noun or pronoun after the verb to be in the gerundial construction (being) is in the nominative case.

Special Rule.—The pronouns I, he, she, we, they follow being; thus:

I had no thought of its being he.

I had no thought of its being she.

He had no thought of its being she.

She had no thought of its being I.

They had no thought of its being me.

To for At.

See Been to.

To, Superfluous Use of.

To is superfluous in such sentences as,
 “Where are you going to?”

To the manor born.

To the manner born, and not to the manor born, is the correct form.

To-day or Today; To-night or Tonight; To-morrow or Tomorrow.

To-day, to-night, or to-morrow may be written either with or without the hyphen, but precedence is given to the hyphenated form.

To-morrow is or To-morrow will be.

"To-morrow will be Tuesday," is the correct form. Compare with "Yesterday was Monday."

Toward, Towards.

Toward and towards are variant forms and are equally correct; but towards is more frequently used than toward.

Transfer, Transferral, Transference.

Transfer, transferral, transference, are interchangeable in meaning.

Transpire and Happen.

Instead of saying, "What has transpired in my absence?" one properly says, "What has occurred in my absence?" Transpire properly means to make known; as, "Presently it transpired that she had taken all her belongings with her."

Transpire and Perspire.

Transpire and perspire are recorded as interchangeable in the sense to emit through the excretions of the skin and lungs; but in actual usage, perspire, not transpire, seems to be generally employed to express this meaning, transpire being restricted to mean to pass out, as in D'Israeli's employment of the word:

“But how are we to account, in a mind otherwise sane, for his (Harrington’s) notion that his thought transpired from him, and took the shape of flies or bees.”

Try an experiment.

One properly says, “Make (not try) an experiment,” an experiment being a trial.

Try and.

Instead of saying “I will try and come” one properly says, “I will try to come;” try being used in the sense of endeavor.

Try as we will.

Try as we may, not “Try as we will,” is the required form.

Turn away around.

Away is superfluous in the expression, “Turn away around.” Way, in the use of away, is always incorrect.

Twice two are four.

“Twice two are four,” is correct.

See Four and Five Is or Are.

Twins.

Twins means two; twin means one of two. A pair of twins means two individuals; two pair, four.

Two and two are.

See Four and Five Is or Are.

Two first.

See First Two and Last Two.

U.

Unbeknown.

Unbeknown for unknown, recorded as a colloquialism, is highly condemned by some critics.

Under his signature or Over his signature.

Although criticised by some authorities, "Under his signature" is correct, the meaning being, "under sanction of his signature."

Undesirable and Indesirable.

Undesirable is the correct form, undesirable being obsolete.

Unfrequently and Infrequently.

Both unfrequently and infrequently are recorded, but the former is rare.

Unmoral and Immoral.

While unmoral is recorded, in one of its definitions, as meaning not moral, it is nicely used of that which is not a subject of moral attributes; neither moral nor immoral. Immoral means not moral; dissolute; unprincipled; not consistent with moral law.

Unique.

Unique is not properly modified by very, unique meaning the only one of its kind.

United States.

United States is a singular noun, and, hence requires a singular verb; as, "The United States is a great nation."

Until.

See till.

Upon and On.

See Call on and Call upon.

Us coming.

See My going.

Usage and Use.

Usage means the customary mode of employing a word, phrase or clause. Use, while occasionally employed in this sense, more commonly applies to the state of being employed; utility; serviceableness.

Use to.

Used to, not use to, is the correct form; as, "I used to go there very often." In negative constructions, "didn't used to" is always incorrect.

Usually.

See Commonly, Generally, Frequently, Usually.

V.

Valuable and Valued.

Century gives the following:

"Valuable means: (a) Capable of being valued; (b) Of great value or price; having financial worth; as, 'a valuable horse;' 'valuable land;' 'a valuable house;' (c) Of great moral worth, utility or importance; precious, worthy, estimable; deserving esteem; as, 'a valuable friend;' 'a valuable companion.'" None of these uses are given under valued. Standard's definitions agree with Century, and under valued it gives as one of the meanings, much esteemed; as, "a valued friendship."

Veracity and Truth.

Veracity is applied to persons and to statements made by them. Truth is applied to persons and to facts.

VERBAL NOUNS.

The possessive case is always required before a verbal noun; as, "There is no use in your (his, her, our, or their) going," not

"There is no use in you (him, my, your, his, us or them) remaining." See My going.

Very pleased.

Very cannot directly modify a verb, and, hence, not its past participle. One properly says, "I am pleased (or delighted) to meet you," or "I am very much pleased (or delighted) to meet you," but not "I am very pleased (or very delighted) to meet you."

View to and View of.

One properly says, "With a view to finding out" or "With the view of finding out."

Visit with.

Visit is improperly followed by with in such constructions as, "I am visiting with friends in New York," "I am visiting friends," etc., being the correct form.

Vocation.

See Avocation.

W.

Wages.

See Concord of Subject and Verb.

Wake, Awake, and Awaken.

Wake and awake, used in the sense of to arouse from sleep, are interchangeable in meaning. Awaken is more especially used in a figurative sense; as, "Hope awakened in his heart."

The use of the intensive adverb up, with wake, though redundant, may be sanctioned because of its frequent employment by good speakers.

Want, Wish, or Desire.

See Desire.

Want of.

Want of is censured in such constructions as, "What does he want of a new automobile?" "What need has he of a new automobile?" being regarded as a more desirable expression.

Was and Were.

See If it was and If it were.

Was come.

See Is come.

Was or Were to be or To have been.

Was or were with the infinitive, forms a kind of compound tense; as, "There was less trouble than was to be expected;" "There were fewer defalcations than were to be expected."

Whether it is permissible to use a perfect infinitive with was or were is a question about which authorities differ; some ruling that the perfect infinitive is correct in such sentences as, "The wedding was to have taken place before her parents' departure for Europe."

Way and Away.

Way (or 'way, an abbreviation of away) should not be used redundantly. Instead of saying, "He has gone way out West," one properly says, "He has gone West," both way and out being superfluous.

Ways for Way.

Ways is incorrectly used for way in such sentences as, "He lives a long ways from here," "He lives a long way" being the correct form.

Well and Good.

See Good.

Welsh Rabbit or Welsh Rarebit.

See Rarebit or Rabbit.

Were and Was.

See If I was and If I were.

Were after As if.

See As if.

Were after Wish.

The subjunctive were, not the indicative was, is required after wish; as, "I wish the ball were over." Note that when one can say to oneself "but it (he or she) is not," were is correct; thus: "I wish the ball were over" (but it is not). "I wish he were here" (but he is not). When the meaning is, "but he (she or it) was not," then had been is required; as, "I wish he had been here (but he was not).

See I wish I (he, she, it) were.

What for Why.

What is incorrect for why; thus: "Why did you come?" not "What did you come for?" unless the question means "What things did you come for?"

Whatever and Wherever for What and Where.

The use of whatever and wherever for what and where in such constructions as, "Whatever shall I do?" "Wherever shall I go?" is incorrect; whatever and wherever being properly used only as relative pronouns; as, "I will do whatever you ask me to do;" "I will go wherever you wish me to go."

Where's for Where are.

The contraction where's should not be used when the subject is plural; as, for example, "Where's my rubbers?" for "Where are my rubbers?"

WHETHER . . . OR: HOW TO USE THEM.

Whether is used to introduce the first of two (or more) alternatives, the second alternative being introduced by or.

The Omission of Or.

1. Whether may be used to introduce a single alternative, the second alternative, introduced by or, being implied; as, "I do not know whether I shall go."

Note that the words or not are understood. Note also that one may say either: "I do not know whether I can go;" "I do not know whether I can go or not;" "I do not know whether or not I can go." The third form, however, does not seem to be so commonly employed as do the first and the second.

Note also in this connection that many speakers use the conjunction if instead of whether. Thus: "I do not know if I can go." Inasmuch as if is used specifically to introduce a suppositional clause, as, "I shall not go if it rains," its use to introduce an alternative clause is censured by many critics. See If and Whether.

The Repetition of Whether.

Whether should not be repeated unless there is introduced another alternative distinct from the one already implied; for, inasmuch as whether is employed to indicate a choice of things, it is superfluous to repeat it before the second alternative (expressed or understood). Thus:

INCORRECT.

I do not know whether I shall go to New York or whether I shall remain in Chicago.

CORRECT.

I do not know whether I shall go to New York or remain in Chicago.

The repetition of whether is incorrect, for the reason that the choice is not expressed (or implied) in the first alternative. It is not until the second part of the construction introduced by or is given that the choice is expressed.

In the following sentences, the repetition of whether is correct, for the reason that there are two distinct alternatives. Thus:

CORRECT.

I do not know whether I shall go to New York or stay in Chicago, or whether, if I decide to go to New York, my employer will be willing to have me go.

I can not tell whether it is best to go (or to remain at home), or whether, if I were to go, I should lose my position here.

Whether or No.

The expression "whether or no" in such constructions as, "I do not know whether he will come or no," is censured by critics. Standard says that usage has legitimatized it, but that "whether or not" is more strictly correct. Century records the use of "whether or no" in such constructions as, "He will do it whether or no," as colloquial.

Whereabouts.

Whereabouts is construed as a singular noun, and, hence, requires a singular verb; as, "His whereabouts is unknown."

While and Whilst.

Century records while and whilst as interchangeably used. Standard says that whilst is the old form of while; that it is generally euphonic, and that it is still widely used in England.

Who, Which, and That.

For construction of who, which, and that, see Relative pronouns.

Who and Whom.*

Who, not whom, is required in such constructions as, "I know a man who, I think, will do the work for you." The rule is as follows:

Rule.—Use Who when it is the subject of a verb. Use Whom when it is the object of a verb or a preposition.

Caution.—Do not use Whom as an object when it is in reality the subject of a verb from which it is separated; thus: in the sentence, "I know a man who, I think, will do the work." Who is the subject of will do, and not the object of think.

Who.

Who, do you think, gave this to me? (Who gave.)

Who, do you suppose, is in the other room? (Who is.)

Who, do you imagine, is the culprit? (Who is.)

I gave it to the gentleman who, you thought, was Mr. Brown. (Who was.)

A lady met me at the depot who, I understand, is your aunt. (Who is.)

Do you know any one who, you feel, would be competent to undertake this work? (Who would be.)

It is he who addressed us at the meeting; it is he whom you addressed. (Who addressed and you addressed whom.)

Whom.

Whom do you mean? (You mean whom.)

Whom shall you invite? (You shall invite whom.)

For whom is this? or Whom is this for? (This is for whom.)

From whom is your letter? or Whom is your letter from? (Your letter is from whom.)

Whom can you recommend for the position? (You can recommend whom for the position.)

This is the gentleman whom, I think, you meant. (You meant whom.)

I know a gentleman whom, I think, I can safely recommend. (I can recommend whom.)

Do you know any one whom you can recommend? (You can recommend whom.)

There are several persons whom I should not hesitate to entrust with this commission. (I should not hesitate to entrust whom.)

Name some one whom I can engage to do this. (I can engage whom.)

Who and Whom, Compound forms of.

Sometimes the compound forms of the relative pronoun are required apparently to perform the function of both a subject and an object (direct or indirect), at the same time. When this is the case, the pronoun should be put into the nominative case.

EXAMPLES.

“There the invalid lay, and turned toward the crowd a white, suffering face, which was yet so heavenly that it comforted whoever looked at it. (Whoever is the subject of the verb looked. The object of the verb comforted is the noun clause, "Whoever looked at it.")

He offered his property to whoever would make the highest bid. (Whoever is the subject of the verb would make. The object of the preposition to is the noun clause, "Whoever would make the highest bid.")

INCORRECT.

I shall sell my property to whomever will pay me the most money.

He offered a prize to whomever would answer the greatest number of questions.

He offered his entire fortune to whomsoever would save his child.

CORRECT.

I shall sell my property to whoever will pay me the most money.

He offered a prize to whoever would answer the greatest number of questions.

He offered his entire fortune to whosoever would save his child.

INCORRECT.

I invited whomever had previously invited me.
I like whomever likes me.

CORRECT.

I invited whoever had previously invited me.
I like whoever likes me.

The same rule applies to the single forms who and whom; as, "I do not know who is invited;" "I do not know whom he has invited." (He has invited whom.)

Whoever and Whosoever.

Whoever and whosoever, with the objective forms whomever and whomsoever, are interchangeably used.

Who, Whom, or That, Omission of.

See Relative Pronoun, Omission of.

Whole lot.

Whole lot for great deal is not in accordance with good usage.

Whose and Of which.

See Relative Pronouns.

Why.

Why properly follows reason in such constructions as, "The reason why he returned was that he was ill." In this connection, note that that properly introduces the noun clause that he was ill.

Widow Woman.

Woman is superfluous after widow.

Will.

See Shall and Will.

Wisht.

Instead of "I wisht I were going," one properly says, "I wish I were going," or "I wish that I were going."

(For omission of that, see That.)

Within and In the time.

Within is nicely used when the sense is during; within the limit or duration of, in being nicely reserved to express the meaning at the expiration of; as, "He will be here within an hour'' (within the limit of); "He will be here in an hour'' (at the expiration of).

Without for Unless.

Without is improperly used for unless. Instead of saying, "You cannot go without you take your umbrella," one properly says, "You cannot go unless you take your umbrella," or "You cannot go without your umbrella."

Worse for More.

Instead of "I dislike him worse than ever," one properly says, "I dislike him more than ever," the use of worse in the sense of more being incorrect.

Wrong and Wrongly.

Wrong is an adverb as well as an adjective. For this reason, wrong is often interchangeably used with wrongly; as, "The mail was sent off wrong" (or wrongly). When preceding the verb, wrongly is required; as "The letter was wrongly addressed."

Would better.

See Had better.

Would sooner or Would rather.

Sooner or rather are interchangeable in meaning when used to express "readiness or willingness to do." See Had better.

Would seem.

See Should and Would.

Would like.

In the first person, "would like" or "would have liked" is always incorrect. One properly says, "I should like" or "I should have liked."

In the second and the third person, would is correct; thus: "You (he, she, they) would like" or "would have liked."

See Should and Would.

Wouldn't want.

Wouldn't want is always incorrect in the first person, "I shouldn't want" being the correct form. In the second and the third person wouldn't is required.

Write you.

In business usage, the preposition to may be omitted, its presence being understood.

Y.

Yearly and Annually.

See Annual.

Yet and As yet.

Yet and as yet are interchangeably used; as, "His letter has not yet (or as yet) been received."

You are mistaken.

See I am not mistaken.

You was.

"You was" is always incorrect, were being required for both the singular and the plural number of the second person (you.)

You for One.

See One.

Your Going.

See My going.

You're Not.

See Contractions.

REFERENCE DEPARTMENT

CONCORD OF AUXILIARY AND PRINCIPAL VERB.*

The rule that governs the concord of auxiliary and principal verbs is as follows: When two or more auxiliary verbs are used with reference to one principal verb, the auxiliaries and the principal verb must be in concord; thus:

I have been, and I shall always be, delighted to see you whenever you come.

If the auxiliary and the principal verb cannot agree, a second principal verb must be introduced; thus: “I have regretted, and I shall always regret that I did not go abroad with you;” not “I have, and shall always regret that I did not go abroad with you.”

Sometimes the principal verb (understood) is incorrectly made to refer to an infinitive with which it is not in accord; thus: “I advise others to take the same course that I have taken,” not “I advise others to take the same course that I have.”

In the following there is a lack of concord of tenses in the incorrect form: “I think that he has seen him, and did what I requested him to do.” This should be, “I think that he has seen him, and has done what I requested him to do,” or “I think that he has seen him and that he did what I requested him to do.”

CONCORD OF THE INFINITIVE WITH THE PRINCIPAL VERB.*

(a) When the infinitive refers to a time either coincident with or after that of the prin-

* CORRECT ENGLISH: A COMPLETE GRAMMAR, p. 198.

principal verb, the present infinitive is used; thus:

In the following examples the time of the infinitive is either coincident with, or after that of the principal verb.

1. I mean to write.

I intend to go.

I am happy to meet you.

2. I meant to write, not I meant to have written.

I intended to go, not I intended to have gone.

I hoped to see her, not I hoped to have seen her.

It was their duty to tell him, not It was their duty to have told him.

Note.—Instead of saying, “I should have liked to have gone,” or “I should like to have gone,” one should say, “I should have liked to go,” for the liking or the desire to go would precede the going.

THE PERFECT INFINITIVE.

(b) When the infinitive refers to a time prior to that of the principal verb, the perfect infinitive is used; thus:

I am happy to have met you.

Many verbs in the infinitive mode have a passive as well as an active voice.

I was glad to be remembered.

I am glad to have been remembered.

CONCORD OF VERB WITH ANTECEDENT OF RELATIVE PRONOUN.*

A verb that has for a subject a relative pronoun, is singular or plural according as the antecedent of the relative pronoun is singular or plural; thus: "This is one of the most interesting books that have appeared this year." The plural form have is correct, for the reason that the antecedent books of the relative pronoun that is plural.

In the sentence, "This is the only one of the books that is worth reading," it is the pronoun one, and not the noun books, that is the antecedent of the relative pronoun that.

When the relative pronoun has for its antecedent a personal pronoun, caution is necessary in order that the verb may be of either the first, the second, or the third person, as required. In other words, the verb that has for its subject a relative pronoun must agree with the antecedent of that relative in person as well as in number; thus:

It is I who am in the wrong.

It is you who are in the wrong.

It is he (or she) who is in the wrong.

It is we (or they) who are in the wrong.

"It is I, your teacher, who am in the wrong."

In the last sentence, note that even if the appositional noun were regarded as the antecedent of the relative pronoun, the person and the number would be the same, because of the agreement of the appositional noun with its antecedent in both person and number.

Note.—In the case of compound antecedents, the verb agrees in person and number with the antecedent that immediately precedes the relative; thus:

It is either he or I that am to blame.

It is either he or your friends that are in the wrong.

It is either you or I that am to blame.

(When possible, the plural noun or pronoun should immediately precede the relative.)

CONCORD OF SUBJECT AND VERB.*

A verb is singular or plural according as its subject is singular or plural, for the meaning, and not the form of the subject, determines whether it shall be regarded as singular or plural.

As a rule, a compound subject is regarded as plural, and, hence, a plural verb is required; as, "My father and mother are there." There are cases, however, when the compound subject is regarded as singular, and, hence, a singular verb is required.

The following are the rules that apply in special cases:

Rule 1.—When the subject nouns are singular and refer to the same person or thing, the compound subject is regarded as singular, and the singular verb is used.

A laggard in love and a dastard in war
Was to wed the fair Ellen of brave Lochinvar.

Rule 2.—When the subject consists of a single noun modified by two adjectives so as to mean two distinct things, it is plural, and requires a plural verb.

The old and the new Testament constitute the Bible. (Testament must be regarded as understood after old.)

Rule 3.—When the subject nouns are preceded by each, every, or no, the compound subject is singular.

*CORRECT ENGLISH: A COMPLETE GRAMMAR.

Each girl and each boy (or each girl and boy) was requested to be present.

Every mother and every father (or every mother and father) has this feeling of responsibility.

No work and no money (or no work and money) was the possible fate that awaited him.

Rule 4.—When it is desired to make one of the subject nouns emphatic, the singular verb is required if the subject noun upon which the emphasis is laid, is singular; otherwise the plural verb is required.

Not riches, but honor, makes the man.

Riches, not honor, were what he sought.

When the negative expression and not or not precedes a subject noun, the verb is always singular or plural according as the first subject noun is singular or plural; as, The son, and not the parents, is in the wrong. The parents, and not the son, are in the wrong.

When, in a compound subject, the part following a singular noun may be regarded as a parenthetical expression or afterthought, the singular verb is required; as, “Henry, and Kate and Mary, too, likes candy.”

Rule 5.—When in a compound subject, the subject nouns are separated by the predicate verb, the verb agrees with the first subject noun.

A heavenly race demands thy zeal, and an immortal crown.

The leader of the band was slain and all his men.

If the first noun is plural, the verb is plural; as, “The leaders of the band were slain, and all their men.”

When the subject is separated from the verb, it is necessary to exercise caution, as the subject may appear plural when it is, in reality, singular; thus: A singular verb should always be used when a singular subject is separated from its verb by an adjective phrase introduced by the preposition of. See Any one . . . is.

Rule 6.—A singular verb should always be used when a singular subject is modified by a phrase introduced by the preposition with.

This, with several other causes which I shall not name, was the occasion of his downfall.

Sometimes the preposition with is used when, in reality, the sense is plural, requiring instead the conjunction and.

ORIGINAL.

The chief, with all his attendants, was captured.

IMPROVED.

The chief and all his attendants were captured.

If, however, with is used, the verb should always be singular; but, as indicated, inasmuch as in these sentences the sense is plural, it is better to use the conjunction and, as the use of the preposition with should be restricted to a subject with a singular meaning; thus: "The house, with its attractive surroundings, was very easily disposed of;" "Poverty, with its thousand ills, was his lot."

Rule 7.—A singular verb should always be used when a singular subject is followed by as well as; that is, when as well as is correctly used.

He as well as you is to blame.

The boy as well as his sister deserves praise.

Sometimes the phrase as well as is used when, in reality, the sense requires the conjunction and.

ORIGINAL.

The horse as well as the driver was killed.

IMPROVED.

The horse and the driver were killed.

If, however, as well as is used, the verb should always be singular; but, as indicated, when as well as is used in order to make an illustrative comparison, it is always correctly used; otherwise, the conjunction and is required. Thus, one correctly says: "His curiosity as well as his anxiety, was excited," or "His curiosity and his anxiety were excited," but not "His curiosity as well as his anxiety were excited."

Rule 8. When the real subject follows the verb, and the sentence is introduced by a word that is used, for the time being, in place of the subject, the singular verb is often used even when the real subject is plural.

"Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory."

"There was racing and chasing on Cannobie Lea."

"Such was the intelligence, the gravity, and the self-command of Cromwell's warriors."

While usage varies in cases of a compound subject, where the first noun that follows the verb is singular, it is always incorrect to use the singular verb when the noun that follows it is plural. Thus, while the construction,

“There was racing and chasing on Cannobie Lea,” is sanctioned by some grammarians on the ground of ellipsis, constructions like the following are always incorrect: “There was reasons why he could not go.”

In the following examples the subject noun that follows the verb introduced by there is plural; hence, the verb should be plural:

CORRECT.

“On the table there were neatly and handily arranged two long pipes.” (Not was.)

“There exist sometimes only in germ and potentiality, sometimes more or less developed, the same tendencies and passions that have made our fellow-citizens of other classes what they are.” (Not exists.)

The following constructions would be regarded as incorrect by those grammarians who do not sanction the use of the singular verb, even when the first subject noun of the compound is singular:

There was about her the brilliancy of courts and palaces, the enchantment of a love-story, the suffering of a victim of despotic power.—Raub.

Surely there is both grandeur and eloquence in his apostrophe to the atheists whom he knew abounded in Louis XIV’s Court, etc.—Raub.

The following constructions are regarded as correct by those grammarians who sanction the use of the singular verb with a compound subject, when the first subject noun is singular:

There was a hen and (there were) chickens in the court.—Bain and Maxwell.

Upon this there was a fearful cry from heaven and (there were) great claps of thunder.—Bain and Maxwell.

Rule 9.—When the compound subject is composed of phrases and clauses, the singular verb may be used, although some grammarians require the plural.

COMPOUND SUBJECT COMPOSED OF PHRASES.

To know her and to love her is joy to me.

“To recover Silesia, to humble the dynasty of Hohenzollern to the dust was the great object of Maria Theresa’s life.”

COMPOUND SUBJECT COMPOSED OF CLAUSES.

That the train is late and that we are thus delayed, is annoying.

That he is ambitious and that he will succeed, is evident.

In constructions of this kind, a pronoun is sometimes introduced, as in the following sentences: “To be the leader of the human race in the career of improvement, to found on the ruins of ancient intellectual dynasties a more prosperous empire, to be revered by the latest generations as the most illustrious among the benefactors of mankind, all this was within Bacon’s reach.”

In this connection note that the use of the plural verb in constructions of this kind is not general; hence, it would seem preferable, in many instances, to use the singular verb. The following are correct:

To do our duty to the public and to be just to ourselves is a difficult task (are difficult tasks).

That we should do our duty to the public and that we should be just to ourselves is a self-evident truth (or are self-evident truths).

Rule 10.—When the compound subject consists of two or more singular nouns or pronouns connected by the conjunctions “either—or” or “neither—nor,” it is singular, and, hence, the verb is singular.

Either John or his father is going.

Neither John nor his father is going.

These conjunctions make the subject singular, for the reason that an assertion is made of only one of the subjects.

When the subjects differ in person, the verb agrees with the one that immediately precedes it.

Either he or I am going.

Neither he nor I am going.

When one of the subject nouns is plural, the plural verb is required, and the plural noun must immediately precede the verb.

Either James or his sisters have the book.

Neither James nor his sisters have the book.

In the case of pronouns, the same rule does not always obtain; thus, while the plural pronoun would immediately precede the verb in the sentence, “Either he or they are going,” the singular pronoun would precede the verb in the sentence, “Either you or I am going,” or “Either you or he is going.” The reason for this is that precedence should be given to the position of you.

See Concord of the relative pronoun and the verb.

Rule 11.—When the noun is plural in form but singular in meaning, it takes a singular verb.

His whereabouts is unknown, or His whereabouts has not been discovered.

Note.—Whereabouts means simply location.

Five hundred dollars was the amount spent.

Note.—Five hundred dollars is thought of as an entity.

Some words have both a singular and a plural form; thus: pair, dozen. When preceded by a numeral, these words, whether singular or plural in meaning, take the singular form; but when not preceded by a numeral, they take the plural form.

Of is frequently omitted; thus, “a dozen eggs,” instead of “a dozen of eggs;” “two dozen eggs,” instead of “two dozen of eggs;” but not “there are several dozen eggs,” instead of “there are several dozens of eggs.”

SINGULAR IN FORM AND SINGULAR IN MEANING.

This is a new pair of gloves.

There is a dozen of eggs in the basket.

SINGULAR IN FORM AND PLURAL IN MEANING.

There are two pair of gloves in the box.

There are two dozen of eggs in the basket.

PLURAL IN FORM AND MEANING.

There are several pairs of gloves in the box.

There are several dozens of eggs in the basket.

Other words that admit of a plural form when not preceded by a numeral are: brace, braces; head, heads; score, scores; hundred, hundreds; etc.; thus, “two brace of ducks,” but “several braces,” etc.

The following nouns, although plural in form, are regarded as singular, and so are followed by singular verbs; amends, news, summons, gallows, politics, physics, optics, mathematics.

Summons has a plural form, summonses.

The following nouns may be used either in the singular or in the plural: means, odds, pains, wages.

SINGULAR.

This means (or these means) was (or were) used to influence him.

No pains is (or are) taken to make it pleasant.

The odds is (or are) in his favor.

The wages of sin is death.

His wages are small.

Some nouns have the same form for both the singular and the plural; as, deer, sheep, trout, salmon.

Rule 12.—When the noun is plural in form and plural in meaning it takes a plural verb.

The following nouns are plural in both form and meaning and so are followed by plural verbs: alms, archives, ashes, bellows, billiards, bitters, breeches, cattle, clothes, compasses, contents, goods, manners, matins, measles, morals, nuptials, nippers, pincers, pantaloons, riches, scissors, tidings, tongs, tweezers, trousers, shears, scales.

Note.—Contents is plural in form and plural in meaning; as, “The contents of your letter surprise me.” Occasionally, however, where the context favors a singular construction, the singular verb is used; as, “The contents of the jug is vinegar.” Tidings, likewise, is construed as plural, but is occasionally found in literature in the singular. The present usage, however, is in favor of the plural; as, “These tidings are alarming.”

SHALL AND WILL: HOW TO USE THEM.Declarative Form.*SIMPLE FUTURITY, PROMISE, DETERMINATION.

Shall in the first person and will in the second and the third, are used to express simple futurity; will in the first person and shall in the second and third, are used to express either promise or determination, as the case may require.

Simple Futurity.		Promise or Determination.
I shall,	We shall,	I will,	We will,
You will,	You will,	You shall,	You shall,
He will,	They will.	He shall,	They shall.

When it is correct to say "I shall," it is correct to say "You will" or "He will." When it is correct to say "I will," it is correct to say "You shall" or "He shall." The same rule obtains in the plural number.

Simple Futurity.

I shall go abroad in the spring.

Meaning.—I am going abroad in the spring.

I understand that you will go abroad in the spring.

Meaning.—I understand that you are going abroad in the spring.

He will go abroad in the spring.

Meaning.—He is going abroad in the spring.

Promise or Determination.

I will go abroad in the spring.

Meaning.—I promise to go, or I am determined to go.

You shall go abroad in the spring.

Meaning.—I promise that you shall go, or I am determined that you shall go.

He shall go abroad in the spring.

Meaning.—I promise that he shall go, or I am determined that he shall go.

In speaking, the inflection of the voice indicates whether promise or determination is expressed. When the wishes of the speaker and those of the persons spoken to (or of) are the same, promise is expressed by "I will," "You shall," "He shall;" otherwise, determination is expressed.

*From CORRECT ENGLISH: A COMPLETE GRAMMAR.

EXAMPLES.

In the following sentences, the wishes of the speaker and the person spoken to (or of) are the same:

I will go if you wish me to go. (Promise.)

You shall go if you wish to go. (Promise.)

He shall go if he wishes to go. (Promise.)

In the following sentences, the wishes of the speaker and those of the person spoken to (or of) are not the same:

I will go in spite of your protestations. (Determination.)

You shall go in spite of your protestations. (Determination.)

He shall go in spite of his protestations. (Determination.)

Interrogative Form.

The auxiliary that is required in the answer, must be used in the question, except when the person spoken to does not control the speaker.

SHALL.

(Person spoken to decides.)

Singular.

Plural.

Questions.	Answers.	Questions.	Answers.
------------	----------	------------	----------

Shall you go?	I shall go.	Shall you go?	We shall go.
---------------	-------------	---------------	--------------

Shall he go?	He shall go.	Shall they go?	They shall go.
--------------	--------------	----------------	----------------

WILL.

(Each one does as he pleases.)

Singular.

Plural.

Questions.	Answers.	Questions.	Answers.
------------	----------	------------	----------

Will you go?	I will go.	Will you go?	We will go.
--------------	------------	--------------	-------------

Will he go?	He will go.	Will they go?	They will go.
-------------	-------------	---------------	---------------

The form "will I" must never be used in asking a question of another, for the reason that no one can answer the question but the person who asks it. Sometimes, in cases where the person spoken to repeats the question, the form "will I" is used, thus, the question is asked "Will I go?" The person spoken to repeats the auxiliary and says "Will I go? Certainly, I will go," willingness being expressed by his answer.

When the person spoken to does not control the speaker, the auxiliary that is used in the question is not necessarily used in the answer; thus: in the sentence, "Shall I assist you?" the person spoken to may answer, "Yes; if you will, please;" while in the sentence, "Shall I never gain your consent?" the person spoken to may answer, "No; you shall not."

Condition Beyond the Control of the Will.

Shall in the first person, and will in the second and the third, are the correct auxiliaries to use in expressing a condition beyond the control of the will.

EXAMPLES.

Singular.

If I eat this, I shall be ill.

If you eat this, you will be ill.

If he eats this, he will be ill.

Plural.

If we eat this, we shall be ill.

If you eat this, you will be ill.

If they eat this, they will be ill.

(a) A person is happy, delighted, pleased, disappointed, obliged, etc., because he cannot help it. Note that will in the first person, and shall in the second and third persons, express either promise or determination; hence, for a person to say, "I will be ill," is to promise or express determination to be ill. This rule applies to all words that express a condition beyond the control of the will.

FURTHER EXAMPLES.

I shall be obliged to go. Not, I will be obliged to go.

I shall be disappointed if he does not come. Not, I will be disappointed if he does not come.

I shall be happy to see you at any time. Not, I will be happy to see you at any time.

I know that I shall like her. Not, I know that I will like her.

I shall be very glad to see her. Not, I will be very glad to see her.

Sentences in which a Supposition is Made.

If I take this medicine, I shall recover. Not, If I take this medicine, I will recover.

If I go out in the rain without an umbrella, I shall ruin my clothes. Not, If I go out in the rain without an umbrella, I will ruin my clothes.

If I do not make the best of my opportunities, I shall not succeed. Not, If I do not make the best of my opportunities, I will not succeed.

Direct and Indirect Quotation.

A direct quotation is one in which the exact language is reported. An indirect quotation is one in which the form of expression is slightly altered.

Direct Quotation.

He said, "I will be there without fail. (Promise.)

He says, "I will go." (Promise.)

Indirect Quotation.

He said that he would be there without fail. (Promise.)

He says that he will go. (Promise.)

Direct Quotation.

(a) In direct quotation, the auxiliaries shall and will are used the same as in the DECLARATIVE forms.

(b) When the quotation is direct, the words quoted are preceded by a comma, and are placed within quotation marks. When the quotation is indirect, neither the comma nor the quotation marks are used.

(c) When the quotation is direct, the tenses of the verbs do not necessarily accord with each other. When the quotation is indirect, the tenses of the verbs do accord with each other, unless a universal truth is stated.

In the following sentences, the statements express facts pertaining only to the individual:

Correct.

She says that she will go. (Promise or willingness is expressed.)

He said that he would go.

In the following sentences, the statements express universal truths:

He maintained that the earth moves.

He said that only the good are happy.

Indirect Quotation.

(d) In indirect quotations, when the subjects do not refer to the same person, the auxiliaries are used the same way as in the DECLARATIVE form; where the subjects refer to the same person, shall is used in all the persons to express simple futurity, and will is used in all the persons, to express promise or determination.

EXAMPLES.

Subject nouns do not refer to the same person. (Auxiliaries are used the same as in the DECLARATIVE form.)

The teacher says that I shall succeed. (Futurity.)

The teacher says that the pupils will succeed. (Futurity.)

The teacher says that the pupils shall have a holiday. (Promise.)

Subject nouns refer to the same person. (Shall is used to express futurity, and will, to express promise or determination, in all three persons.)

The teacher says that he shall dismiss the pupils. (Futurity.)

The teacher says that he will give the pupils a vacation. (Promise.)

You say that you shall go abroad. (Futurity.)

You say that you will assist me. (Promise.)

Correct.

He asked me whether I would go. (Indirect quotation.)

"He asked, "will you go?" (Direct quotation.)

Note that the mixture of direct and indirect quotation is always incorrect; as, "He asked me would I go."

Doubtful Futurity.

In expressing simple futurity, shall is used in the first person, and will in the second and the third; as, "I shall go," you will go," "He will go." In expressing doubtful futurity as in the sentence, "I think that I shall go," the rule is the same as that in indirect quotation, and is as follows:

(a) In expressing futurity, when the subjects do not refer to the same person, the auxiliaries are used as in the DECLARATIVE form; when the subjects refer to the same person, shall is used throughout the construction.

In the following sentences, the subjects do not refer to the same person, and, hence, the auxiliaries are used the same as in independent constructions:

EXAMPLES.

Simple Futurity. (Indirect Quotation.)

The teacher says that I shall succeed.

The teacher says that you will succeed.

The teacher says that the pupils will succeed.

Doubtful Futurity.

The teacher thinks that I shall succeed.

The teacher thinks that you will succeed.

The teacher thinks that the pupils will succeed.

In the following sentences, the subjects refer to the same person, and, hence, shall is used throughout the constructions:

Simple Futurity.

The teacher says that he shall dismiss the pupils.
He says that he shall go abroad.

Doubtful Futurity.

The teacher thinks that he shall dismiss the pupils.
He thinks that he shall go abroad.

Direct Quotation, Indirect Quotation and Doubtful Futurity in Interrogative Sentences.

In interrogative sentences, the same general rule that applies to the declarative form constructions, applies also to direct and indirect quotation and to doubtful futurity.

(a) The auxiliary that is required in the answer, must be used in the question, when the person spoken to decides the question or controls the speaker.

DIRECT QUOTATION.

Did he say, "Shall I go"?
Did he say, "Shall you go"?
Did he say "Shall he go"?
Did you say, "Shall I go"?
Did he say, "Will you go"?
Did you say, "Will you go"?

INDIRECT QUOTATION AND DOUBTFUL FUTURITY.

The rules for interrogative constructions are the same as in declarative sentences.

(b) In indirect quotation, when the subjects do not refer to the same person, the auxiliaries are used the same as the DECLARATIVE form; when the subjects refer to the same speaker, shall is used in all the persons to express simple futurity, and will is used in all the persons to express promise or determination.

Thus: "The teacher says (or thinks) that the pupils will succeed," becomes "Does the teacher say (or think) that the pupils will succeed?" "The teacher says (or thinks) that he shall dismiss the pupils," becomes, "Does the teacher say (or think) that he shall dismiss the pupils?"

Contingent Futurity.

In subordinate clauses after if, though, although, when, until, etc., shall (or should) is used in all three persons unless the subject is thought of as wishing or consenting, when will (or would) is correct.

EXAMPLES.

Futurity.

If I shall find that I am in the wrong, I shall apologize.

If it shall appear that the prisoner is guilty, he will surely be punished.

Even though the prisoner shall be found guilty, he will not be punished.

Willingness.

If he will go, I will go too.

If you will attend to this matter I will pay you for the work.

Although we will consent to his going, we will not give him permission to remain away for an indefinite period.

In connection with the use of shall, in the foregoing sentences, to express contingent futurity, note that properly speaking, the auxiliary should, and not the auxiliary shall, is required. The use of will, however, in the second and third persons is required when the wishes of the person referred to are considered.

The following sentences are in conformity with the modern usage of the language:

If he comes, I shall go. (Futurity.)

If he comes, I will go. (Willingness.)

If he will come (will be willing), I shall go. (Futurity.)

If he should (or were to) come, I should go. (Futurity.)

If he should come I would go. (Willingness.)

The employment of shall, however, is in accordance with the usage of the language when the subject is not thought of as wishing or consenting.

Request, Desire, Command.

After request or desire, the auxiliary will is used when the assertion is direct and personal; shall when the assertion is indirect and impersonal.

The expression is indirect and impersonal when it is introduced by "it;" as, "It is requested;" "It was requested," etc.

EXAMPLES.

In the following sentences, the assertion is direct and personal; hence, "will" is required:

I request that you will not leave the room.

I desire that you will give the matter immediate attention.

In the following sentences the assertion is indirect and impersonal; hence, "shall" be required:

It is requested that no person shall leave the room.

It is desired that every one shall be present.

In assertions where the third person is spoken of, "will" is the correct auxiliary, if the construction is not introduced by "it."

According to these instructions, the following sentences are correct:

I request that each one present will attend the meeting.

I desire that each one will give the matter immediate attention.

After command, the auxiliary "shall" is always required.

EXAMPLES.

I command that you shall leave the room.

I command that no one shall leave his seat.

SHOULD AND WOULD:.. HOW TO USE THEM.*

Declarative Form.

Should and would follow, in the main, the rules that govern shall and will, with some peculiar uses of their

* CORRECT ENGLISH: A COMPLETE GRAMMAR.

own. When there is no controlling force from without, "I should," "You would," "He would," "We should," "You would," "They would," are used in the same way that "shall" and "will" are used. (See rule under Shall and Will, Declarative Form.)

SHALL AND WILL.

(Simple Future.)

If he invites me, I shall go.

If he invites you, I suppose that you will go.

If he invites her, I suppose that she will go.

SHOULD AND WOULD.

(Contingent Future.)

If he were to invite me, I should go.

If he were to invite you, I suppose that you would go.

If he were to invite her, I suppose that she would go.

(b) Should and would are called the past tense forms of shall and will; this is because they were originally past in meaning, but they are now more especially used to express contingency; that is, what one should or would have done or what one should or would do under special conditions. Past tense uses of these auxiliaries, however, may be seen in such expressions as "He would read for hours at a time." In the foregoing sentences, contingency is expressed.

In addition to expressing contingency, should and would have special uses. Thus: Should in the first person expresses plan, a condition beyond the control of the will, and in all three persons, propriety; would in the first person expresses resolution, and in all three persons willingness or custom.

EXAMPLES.

Should.

If I were going abroad, I should study French.
(Plan.)

If I were to walk so far, I should become fatigued.

(Condition beyond control of the will.)

I know that I should practice several hours each day. (Propriety.)

You should not study so many hours a day. (Propriety.)

He should not walk so far. (Propriety.)

Would.

I would never consent. (Resolution.)

I would do the work for you if I could. (Willingness.)

You would do this for me I know, and so would he. (Willingness.)

When I was a child, I would gaze for hours at the clouds. (Custom.)

When you were a child, you would read for hours at a time. (Custom.)

SHOULD AND OUGHT.—The specific use of should is to express propriety or expediency, but it is often loosely used in a stronger sense to express duty. Thus, in strict usage, we should say, "Children ought to obey their parents." (Moral obligation.) "Children should be seen and not heard." (Propriety.)

Interrogative Form.

The auxiliary that is required in the answer, must be used in the question, except when the person spoken to does not control the speaker.

SHOULD.

(Person spoken to decides.)

Singular.

Questions.

Should you go?

Should he go?

Answers.

I should go.

He should go.

Plural.

Questions.

Should you go?

Should they go?

Answers.

We should go.

They should go.

WOULD.

(Each one does as he pleases.)

Singular.

Questions.	Answers.
Would you go?	I would go.
Would he go?	He would go.

Plural.

Questions.	Answers.
Would you go?	We would go.
Would they go?	They would go.

(a) The question "would I" like "will I," can be answered only by the speaker; hence, these forms should never be used when addressing the person spoken to.

(b) As has been indicated, should in the first person expresses plan, a condition beyond the control of the will, and in all three persons duty (propriety); while would in the first person expresses resolution, and in all three persons, willingness or custom.

In applying the rule given above, it will be readily seen that if should is required in the answer, it must be used in the question; and likewise, if would is required in the answer, it must be used in the question; that is, when the person spoken to decides the question or controls the speaker.

Questions.

Should you go if you were invited?
Should you like to go?
Would he like to go?
Would they enjoy the concert?
Would he sit and read for hours at a time?
Would you forgive him?

Answers.

I should. (Contingent futurity.)
 I should. (Condition beyond the control of the will.)
 He would. (Condition beyond the control of the will.)

They would. (Condition beyond the control of the will.)

He would. (Custom.)

I would never forgive him. (Resolution.)

(c) When the person spoken to does not control the speaker, the auxiliary that is used in the question is not necessarily used in the answer; thus: in the sentence, "Should I like her if I were to meet her?" The person spoken to may answer, "Yes; you would." While in the sentence, "Should I assist her?" (meaning is it my duty to assist her) the person spoken to may answer, "Yes; you should."

Condition Beyond the Control of the Will.

Should in the first person, and would in the second and the third, are the correct auxiliaries to use in expressing a condition beyond the control of the will.

EXAMPLES.

Singular.

If I were to eat this, I should be ill.

If you were to eat this, you would be ill.

If he were to eat this, he would be ill.

Plural.

If we were to eat this, we should be ill.

If you were to eat this, you would be ill.

If they were to eat this, they would be ill.

(a) Would in the first person expresses willingness or resolution; hence, for a person to say "I would be ill" is to express a willingness or a resolution to be ill.

FURTHER EXAMPLES.

In the following sentences, the supposition is implied, but not expressed:

Incorrect.

I would be happy to see you at any time.

I would be happy to meet her.

I would be very much obliged to you.
I know that I would like her.

Correct.

I should be happy to see you at any time.
I should be happy to meet her.
I should be very much obliged to you.
I know that I should like her.

In the sentences given above, there is an ellipsis of the suppositional clause; thus: "I should be happy to see you" (if you were to come); "I should be happy to meet her" (if she were to call), etc. In the following sentences, the supposition is expressed:

Incorrect.

If I were to take this medicine, I would recover.
If I were to go out in the rain without an umbrella, I would ruin my clothes.
If I did not make the best of my opportunities, I would not succeed.
I would be obliged to go if he were to come.

Correct.

If I were to take this medicine, I should recover.
If I were to go out in the rain without an umbrella, I should ruin my clothes.
If I did not make the best of my opportunities, I should not succeed.
I should be obliged to go if he were to come.

Direct and Indirect Quotations.

In direct quotation, the auxiliaries "should" and "would" are used the same as in the declarative form.

DIRECT QUOTATION.

He said, "I should go if I were able." (Simple subjunctive futurity.)

He said, "If I were to go abroad I should study French." (Plan.)

He said, "If I were to eat this, I should be ill." (Condition beyond the control of the will.)

He said, "I would not go under any circumstances."
(Determination.)

He said, "When I was a child I would study for several hours at a time." (Custom.)

He said, "I know that I should learn my lessons."
(Duty or propriety.)

INDIRECT QUOTATION.

In indirect quotation, when the subjects do not refer to the same person the auxiliaries are used the same as in declarative constructions; when the subjects refer to the same person, should is used in all three persons to express simple contingent futurity, plan, propriety, a condition beyond the control of the will as the case may be, and "would" is used in all three persons to express willingness, promise or determination.

Subject nouns do not refer to the same person.

The teacher said that I should succeed. (Contingent futurity.)

The teacher said that the pupils would succeed. (Contingent futurity.)

The teacher said that the pupils should learn their lessons. (Propriety.)

The teacher said that sometimes the pupils would study for several hours at a time. (Custom.)

The teacher said that if the pupils were to study too hard, they would be ill. (Condition beyond the control of the will.)

The teacher said that if I were to eat this, I should be ill. (Condition beyond the control of the will.)

Subject nouns refer to the same person.

The teacher said that he should dismiss the class.
(Contingent futurity.)

The teacher said that he would give the pupils a vacation. (Promise.)

He said that when he was a child he would watch the clouds for hours at a time. (Custom.)

The teacher said that if he were to eat this he should be ill. (Condition beyond the control of the will.)

I said that if I were to go abroad, I should study French. (Plan.)

to study hard, they would become ill. (Condition beyond the control of the will.)

The teacher said (or thought) that the pupils would study harder if they had more time. (Contingent futurity.)

Subjects Refer to the Same Person.

Questions.

Did the teacher say (or think) that he should assist his pupils as much as possible. (Propriety.)

Did the teacher say (or think) that he should like to assist his pupils? (Condition beyond the control of the will.)

Did the teacher say (or think) that he should go abroad if he could leave his pupils. (Contingent futurity.)

The teacher said (or thought) that he should assist his pupils as much as possible. (Propriety.)

The teacher said (or thought) that he should like to assist his pupils. (Condition beyond the control of the will.)

The teacher said (or thought) that he should go abroad if he could leave his pupils. (Contingent futurity.)

(a) In the first person, "should" or "shall" is always required irrespective of the auxiliary that may be used in the answer; thus:

Questions.

Should I obey his wishes? (Propriety.)

Should I be ill if I were to eat this? (Condition beyond the control of the will.)

Should I become fatigued if I were to go? (Condition beyond the control of the will.)

Did you say (or think) that I should be able to go? (Contingent futurity.)

Did you say (or think) that I should assist my parents? (Propriety.)

Did you say (or think) that I should like him? (Condition beyond the control of the will.)

Idiomatic Uses.

“HAD” FOR “SHOULD (OR WOULD) HAVE.”

(a) In idiomatic use, the indicative form is often used when the subjunctive might be expected.

Indicative (Idiomatic).

I had given up in despair, had I not received assistance.

Many deeds, which had otherwise appeared noble, were shown to be ignoble.

Subjunctive.

I should have despaired if I had not received assistance.

Many deeds, which would otherwise have appeared noble, were shown to be ignoble.

2. “Would” in the expression of a wish.

(b) In poetry (and in Anglo-Saxon), “would” is sometimes used in the sense of wish.

WOULD.

Would that I had gone.

Would that I had never seen this day.

WISH.

I wish that I had gone.

I wish that I had never seen this day.

3. Omission of “if.”

(c) “If,” followed immediately by a subject noun or pronoun, is frequently omitted.

Futurity.

If I should (were to) go to the city, I should call on him.

Even if you should (or were to) fail, you would not become discouraged.

If he should (or were to) call in my absence, tell him to call to-morrow.

Should I like her if I knew her? (Condition beyond the control of the will.)

Should I regret this? (Condition beyond the control of the will.)

Answers.

You should.

You would be ill, etc.

You would, etc.

I said (or thought) that you would be able to go.

I said (or thought) that you should assist them.

I said (or thought) that you would like him.

You would, etc.

You would not.

(b) In indirect quotation or in doubtful futurity the same rules obtain.

Do you think that I should like it?

I think that you would.

(c) The same rules apply to "shall" in the first person.

(d) In subordinate clauses after if, though, although, when, until, etc., should (like shall) is used in all three persons unless the subject is thought of as wishing or consenting, when would (or will) is correct.

It Should Seem; It Would Seem.

(d) "It should seem" and "It would seem" are often used for "It seems," or "I think" as being more modest forms of expression.

It would seem that he ought to go under the circumstances.

It seems (or I think) he ought to go under the circumstances.

(e) "It should seem" conveys a slightly different meaning from "it would seem." The former means, "It seems that it should be so," while the latter means merely "It seems." The expression "It would seem" is more commonly employed than is, "It should seem." There is a growing tendency, however, to use "It would seem" when "It should seem" is required.

Would Say or Should Say; Will Say or Shall Say.

"Would say" expresses contingent willingness or a wish to say; "should say" expresses contingent futurity, propriety, plan; "will say" expresses willingness, or determination, or promise in the immediate future to say; "shall say" expresses simple futurity.

Even if he should (or were to) fail, he would not become discouraged.

Willingness.

Although I would do this under the circumstances, I should not wish any remuneration.

If he would go, I should be willing to go too.

If you would kindly do this, I should esteem it a favor.

In the sentences given above, note that the auxiliary in the principal clause also takes the subjunctive form when it refers to what is future and contingent. The same rule obtains when the reference is to what is past, uncertain, or denied; as, "If I had known it, I should not have come." "If he had called, he would not have seen me."

Request, Desire, Command.

After request or desire, the auxiliary would (like will) is used when the assertion is direct and personal; should (or shall) when the assertion is indirect and impersonal.

See SHALL AND WILL.

Note.—The expression is indirect and impersonal when it is introduced by "it;" as, "It is requested;" "It was requested," etc.

Omission of If.

Were he in the wrong, he should be punished.

Had he been present, this would not have occurred.

Presence of If.

If he were in the wrong, he should be punished.

If he had been present.
